Business facilitators[edit] Business facilitators work in business , and other formal organizations but facilitators may also work with a variety of other groups and communities. This can and does give rise to organizational conflict between hierarchical management and theories and practice of empowerment. Facilitators often have to navigate between the two, especially where overt statements about empowerment are not being borne out by organizational behaviors. Their role is to support constructive and democratic dialogue between groups with diverse and usually diametrically opposite positions. Conflict resolution facilitators must be impartial to the conflicting groups or societies and must adhere to the rules of democratic dialogue. They may not take parts or express personal opinions. Educational facilitators[edit] Educators in dialogic learning and other peer instruction approaches often serve as facilitators. According to one common definition, an educational facilitator has the same level of knowledge about both education and the subject matter as a teacher , but works with the goal of having students take as much responsibility for their own learning as possible. Training facilitators[edit] Training facilitators are used in adult education. These facilitators are not always subject experts, and attempt to draw on the existing knowledge of the participant s , and to then facilitate access to training where gaps in knowledge are identified and agreed on. Training facilitators focus on the foundations of adult education: The role is different from a trainer with subject expertise. Such a person will take a more leading role and take a group through an agenda designed to transmit a body of knowledge or a set of skills to be acquired. See tutelary authority above. Wraparound facilitators[edit] Wraparound facilitators are facilitators in the social services community. They originally served disabled teens who were transitioning into adulthood. Now they include facilitators serving children between the ages of 0â€”3 years who are in need of services. Outside the meetings, the facilitator organizes meetings, engages team members and conducts follow through. The facilitator encourages equal participation among team members. Skills[edit] See Facilitation business for a view of specific skills and activities. Many skills are required to be a good facilitator. The basic skills of a facilitator are about following good meeting practices: The higher-order skills involve watching the group and its individuals in light of group dynamics. In addition, facilitators also need a variety of listening skills including ability to paraphrase; stack a conversation; draw people out; balance participation; and make space for more reticent group members Kaner, et al. A successful facilitator embodies respect for others and a watchful awareness of the many layers of reality in a human group. In the event that a consensus cannot be reached then the facilitator would assist the group in understanding the differences that divide it. Facilitators also require good understanding of processes â€” how to enable group decision-making, structuring agendas for appropriate results, problem-solving, etc. Associations and organizations[edit] The International Association of Facilitators IAF was founded in to promote facilitation as a profession.
