We adhere to strict standards of editorial integrity. Some of the products we feature are from our partners. Sometimes you just need a set of wheels. But that convenience can come at a premium, thanks to airport surcharges. Price out rental locations in the city and compare to what you can get at the airport. Make sure you factor in the cost of a taxi or Lyft to and from your rental location if you rent at a location away from the airport. And take into account time lost to traffic in a city like Chicago. Need help starting your budget? NerdWallet breaks down your spending and shows you ways to save. Shop around online Look at sites like Kayak, Priceline, Cheapcarrental. Just keep in mind that rentals paid in advance are typically nonrefundable. Even after you book, keep shopping. Discount brands like Advantage, Payless, Thrifty and Dollar Rental are also vying for your business, often at a lower rate than big-name rental companies. That savings multiplies over longer trips. Leverage memberships Have a Costco membership? Use it to save money on your next rental car. You can often add a driver for free. AAA memberships are another great money-saving tool. Opt for economy cars Economy cars are typically the cheapest, and therefore the most likely to be booked. You can use this to your advantage, says Brett Graff, a family finance expert and author of a syndicated column called The Home Economist. Not exactly the cozy vacation you had in mind, is it? Stick to one driver Most rental car companies will charge you a daily fee to add an extra driver. There are ways to dodge the fee, though. Others, including National, will waive the fee for spouses, partners and immediate family members if you enroll in their membership program. Have your parents add you as a driver to their insurance. Many credit cards also include basic insurance coverage if you use the card to pay for your rental. Some cards even offer more comprehensive coverage. Build this into your budget. Use the navigation system you carry around in your pocket and save your money for gas. Or go old school and pick up a paper map. While tolls are unavoidable, there are cheaper ways to go about it. After all, the safety of your child is more important than saving a few dollars. Also factor in how likely it is you will have a near-empty tank on return. On a short day or weekend trip, you may just need to top off your tank before returning the car. Longer trips may allow you to roll in on fumes and save a few dollars as you do so. Walk or ride While these tips will help you get a cheap rental car, there is one other surefire way to save: Most major cities have walkable downtowns and extensive public transportation networks, not to mention taxis and ridesharing apps galore. Need a car for a few hours? Check out Zipcar or Enterprise CarShare. Plan in advance, though, since both require a membership. Otherwise, save yourself the hassle of traffic and often costly parking rates, if you can, and buy yourself a weekend metro pass. By Laura Agadoni Aug 24, One dollar bid, now two, now two, will you give me two â€ sold! This sort of bidding war at auctions is all about the dollars. But when you enter a bidding war for a home, other factors besides money can come into play. The important thing to keep in mind is not to offer to pay more than what you can afford. Here are six ways to win a bidding war without overspending. Know what you can really afford As far as emotional purchases go, buying a home ranks right up there with choosing a wedding dress â€ only the financial stakes are much higher. Unless you know ahead of time exactly how much house you can afford , you could easily be sucked into spending too much. Your lender or financial adviser can help you determine that number. Talk with the listing agent You can put in an offer, but unless your agent makes the effort to speak with the listing agent , your offer, in a multiple-offer scenario, will probably not stand out. Gary Hughes , a Virginia agent, recently received 13 offers for a property he listed. But one agent called and had the mortgage lender follow up. Those conversations made all the difference. This seller is probably highly motivated to sell quickly. But just how do you go about closing faster? In fact, the opposite could be true. Submit an as-is offer The fewer conditions you put on buying the house, the more attractive you look to sellers. Consider offering to buy the house as-is. Have you won a bidding war? What was your winning move? Let us know in the comments!

History[edit] In the United States during World War I , rents were "controlled" through a combination of public pressure and the efforts of local anti-rent-profiteering committees. Between and , a number of cities and states adopted rent- and eviction-control laws. Many smaller communities also have rent control â€” notably the California cities of Santa Monica , Berkeley , and West Hollywood [4] â€” along with many small towns in New Jersey. In the early s, rent control in some cities, such as Boston and Cambridge, Massachusetts , was ended by state referenda. New York City contains the majority of units covered by rent control. Rent control laws have stayed on the books for decades in New York because of an inadequate supply of "decent, affordable housing". The current system is very complicated, and most of the protected renters are elderly. Leading the campaign to enact Proposition 13, California politician Howard Jarvis tried to get tenants to vote for Prop 13 by claiming that landlords would pass tax savings along to tenants; when most failed to do so, it became an additional motivating factor for rent control. City of Santa Monica [9] ruled that municipalities could prevent landlords from "going out of business" and withdrawing their properties from the rental market. Reasons given for these laws include residents owning their homes while renting the land the home sits on, the high cost of moving mobile homes, and the loss of home value when they are moved. California, for example, has only 13 local apartment rent control laws but over local mobile home rent control laws. To attempt to not disincentivise investment in new housing stock, rent control laws often exempt new construction. Officers in city government assign members of the board, which will ensure mixed numbers of tenants and property owners to balance out their benefits. Hirsh [17] held by a majority that regulation of rents in the District of Columbia as a temporary emergency measure was constitutional, but shortly afterwards in Chastleton Corp v. Sinclair [18] the same law was unanimously struck down by the Supreme Court. After the s New Deal , the Supreme Court ceased to interfere with social and economic legislation, and a growing number of states adopted rules. For example, in New York City , almost half of property units continue to have the protection of rent regulation, while other units on the private market are left to be priced according to what the market will bear. City of Berkeley [20] , the US Supreme court held that there was no incompatibility between rent control and the Sherman Act. State law[edit] As of , four states California , New York , New Jersey , and Maryland and the District of Columbia have localities in which some form of residential rent control is in effect for normal structures, excluding mobile homes. Typically, a landlord has more information about a home than a prospective tenant can reasonably detect. Moreover, once the tenant has moved in, the costs of moving again are very high. Unscrupulous landlords could conceal defects and, if the tenant complains, threaten to raise the rent at the end of the lease. With rent control, tenants can request that hidden defects, if they exist, be repaired to comply with building code requirements, without fearing retaliatory rent increases. Rent control could thus compensate somewhat for inefficiencies of the housing market. By capping the price of housing, rent control can increase demand and reduce available supply , causing a shortage. In , however, a far less extreme situation was dealt with via chance and favoritism. The natural consequence in a free-market economy is a reduction in supply and consequent shortages. Tucker has argued that rent control has the perverse effect of creating less affordable housing. Likewise, new tenants have serious difficulty finding housing, so they are seriously disadvantaged if they must move. As a result, landlords can impose numerous conditions and requirements. Because enacting rent control on a building reduces the investment return that can be expected from that building, it thereby reduces the present value of the building, which can be viewed as a partial expropriation of private property.
