The appointment of Thierry Henry as his assistant has helped. Henry was part of a transformative French squad which won the World Cup and Euro after decades of disappointment. We sat down and within two minutes I knew he was perfect for the role. In an understated way, Gareth Southgate has prepared England more effectively than many of his World Cup predecessors. Gareth is a thinker. He has a clear vision and he has players he knows really well from his time in the unders. We worked together on ITV during the Euros in Poland and Ukraine and we got on really well and share a similar outlook. Tunisia also have a strong team that has been together for a few years. They like to play but they know how to be solid. Those five teams won the World Cup in modern times, in the last 22 years. They can look internally and get guidance from the generation that won it. You need that because, psychologically, to overcome the unknown is difficult. You can have good individuals but to reach that level you need to unlock something special. He can execute a pass with incredible precision but at a very quick tempo. Eden Hazard is a leader and he would never turn away from getting on the ball. Dries Mertens has been brilliant at Napoli in his first season as a No 9. His appreciation of space and his intelligence makes him really efficient. That is a winning mentality. He was never disrespectful. So we have these strong personalities. Look at Vincent Kompany. We hope he is fit because his experience is so important and he knows how to face adversity. Jordi Cruyff was best man at his wedding on a beautiful day in Wales.

After all, Belgium is just slightly bigger in size than Wales with a population no bigger than that of Cuba. How good could it be? There are more breweries in the U. According to the latest figures furnished to me by Zyθος, Belgium is home to breweries, 93 beer firms and 5 gueuzeries. Well, Belgium has the greatest diversity of original beer styles on the planet. Few would disagree that the country has an unrivaled brewing heritage which is deeply embedded across its towns and villages. Resources, stories and podcasts direct to your inbox: So which Belgian beers are worth checking out? There are plenty of lists of Belgian beers in magazines compiled by people who know a thing or two about beer and there are lots of online rating sites that rank beers. But what about real life recommendations? I contacted a wide range of beer experts â€” sommeliers and cicerones, brewers and judges, bloggers and journalists â€” to compile a list of recommendations. I asked them all one question: The recommendations below are quite fascinating: The 37 amazing Belgian beers you should try: It sits precariously at pH 3. Bottled bright to retain the delicate balance of grain and caramel, burn and edge, its uniquely ancient taste resonates across centuries of beer-making, outgunning the dangerous here-and-now of the craft brewer. Tim Webb is a beer writer and publisher. Find out more about this beer: He was right, and was certainly not the first drinker to have an epiphany while drinking this brew. Lou Pepe Gueuze is a blend of two-year old lambics that are often aged in wooden barrels that used to hold French wine the last time they were filled. The Lou Pepe Gueuze is one of the best of the Brasserie Cantillon range, and should be sought out by any lover of lambic brews or, for lack of a better word, sour beers. Its soft, mellow tartness and mild horse blanket funk will make you smile and desire another glass. May there be more gueuze left in your bottle when that happens. Sometimes they would have been weird in the not-nice way. In fact, there are some today that are like that. Other times they would have been beautifully refined. Luckily we have brewers today who know what to do with half-wild yeast, or else do an excellent job of convincing us that they know. This one is reasonable at 5. But the aroma is the thing, dry-hopped and re-fermented with Brettanomyces. I like to close my eyes and puzzle it out. Where does the floral grapefruit end? Where do the musty lemons begin? He blogs at www.knowyourbeer.com. Known amongst the craft beer world as The Beer Wench, Ashley V Routson is a craft beer evangelist and social media maven on a mission to advance the craft beer industry through education, inspiration, and advocacy. Sadly, many of them are rather one-dimensional, lacking depth and mystery. Feuillien Blonde reflects the joyfully understated gastronomy of its Wallonian homeland. Randy Mosher is a writer, creative consultant, designer and educator specialising in beer. Author of five beer-related books including Tasting Beer, he also teaches at the Siebel Institute. He is an active partner in two Chicago-area breweries: The beer will be restored to its original home in Bruges in when a new brewery opens there. He is the author of more than 20 books on the subject, including Beers to Try Before You Die, one of the biggest-selling books on the subject. If you choose, you always lose. So my advice is to try as many styles and beers as possible. But anyway, I have to stick to the rules. My kind of beers. Zinnebir has a cloudy orange colour and a great nose of honey, pollen, and lemon zest, and light exotic fruits. The taste is malty, with a fine bitterness and a long aftertaste. The beer is the masterpiece of Rosa Merckx, the first female brewmaster of Belgium. After the second world war she started as a secretary at the Liefmans brewery and worked herself up to the position of brewer. Now ninety years old, she still lives next to the brewery, where she checks the beer at least once a week. The wort is brewed at Duvel-Moortgat but ferments in open tanks at their historical brew site in Oudenaarde. There, the lactic acid bacteria form the typical sour taste and character during a long maturation of up to 8 months. In the flavour you also get hints of raisins and red apples. Sour meets sweet at a sublime level. Classic Belgian beers are very balanced and complex, and Westmalle Tripel is a perfect example of this. In aroma it is fruity overripe banana with a fine hop bitterness and soft maltiness fighting for attention. The flavour is just as complex: Westmalle Tripel is the mother of all tripels â€” a world classic! Oak is subdued and the yeasts it contains provide flavours reminiscent of grapefruit, nectarines and pineapple. This beer is either loved or hated. Marc Mertens has since been a member of the Objectieve BierProevers, now Zythos, and he is the current national editor-in-chief for De Zytholoog. It is a simple, honest beer, brewed by the monks themselves and made better by the surroundings. It smells and tastes lightly fruity at the outset, the hops providing an earthy, sometimes grassy character, leading to a firm, bitter, dry finish. It seems like a beer that Saint Benedict, who advocated that monks should live by the work of their own hands, would have appreciated. It is a bit cloudy with a lovely head, mostly hoppy on the nose but when swirled in the glass, it releases a hint of ripe fruit. The taste is more intense, more bitter than malty. Dry, fresh and mature, with a bone dry and very lengthy finish. And when a glass of Orval is lifted to the lips, I find it difficult not to be profane as I take my first sip, such is the magnificence of this beer. This is a beer I could contemplate for all time. Adrian Tierney-Jones is a journalist and writer specialising in beer, pubs, food and travel and how they all collaborate with each other in making the world a more pleasing place. He blogs at http: The beer is grace itself, soft and subtle with delicate flavors. A silken mouthfeel and tropical fruit aromas with a touch of sourness balanced beautifully with spicy hop character. I had the pleasure of meeting her, too, last year during a press junket and her entire range of beers is great, but the tripel remains a divine favorite. It smells of citrus, exotic fruits and wet grains with dry hopped undertones. Due to its more moderate sweetness compared with other Belgian blondes and a kind of infection from wild yeasts, this blonde associates more with lambics and sour beers. This is not such a strange occurrence, given that the brewmaster at Slaghmuylder is Mr. Karel Goddeau, the same guy brewing at De Cam Lambic. Espen Smith is a Norwegian beer critic, well known in Norway from television, talk radio, newspapers and magazines where he gives his open opinions on the newest trends in food, beer and liquor. The resulting beer is a riot of grapefruit and redcurrant flavours underpinned by bready malt and a pinch of white pepper in its dry finish. Matthew Curtis is a beer writer and speaker based in London and author of beer blog Total Ales. In he co-authored Craft Beer: And so they crafted their own beer. Made with three grains – barley, wheat and oats – the golden 7. Tim Hampson has travelled the world in search of the perfect beer. Follow Tim Hampson on Twitter: The beer covers a lot of bases. But if you want to drink a couple with your friends and not think too much about it, it works great too. Bitter before bitterness was trendy. Belgian Beer and Food publisher and editor-in-chief Paul Walsh is from Ireland, but came to Belgium ten years ago to study philosophy at the historic Leuven university. He was working in another branch of the media when he had the bright idea to start a Belgian beer magazine. He lives in Brussels, whenever he manages to get home. Sign-up for free updates below no spam: Duchesse de Bourgogne has become my go-to beer in this situation. The label just might be from a bottle of wine. And that same experience comes out of the bottle. This beer is vinous, sweet and sour, with a slight vinegar touch. Months later, people keep coming back to me about that particular beer and, secretly, I hope it eases people into more sour beers like lambics and gueuzes. Here you will find the Het Anker brewery close to the centre of the town.
