"Humor for a Sister's Heart" was a delightfully, funny book. The stories reminded me so much of things that had gone on between my two sisters and me that I bought a copy of the book for each of them and mailed it to them right away.

This is definitely true of sisters. They have shared a vital part of your life and have been part of many smiles and tears and continue to do so throughout your lives. What better way to share something that you feel from your heart for you sister than with humor? Humor is not merely a means to amuse people but it can be smartly used to make a point and express your deepest feelings without going overboard while doing so. Many a sibling is really uncomfortable when sentiments and feelings are openly expressed. This can lead to awkward silences and confused mumblings especially when you say such things face to face. Instead you can cleverly disguise your feelings in good humor. This will put them at ease and leave them feeling good while also bringing a smile to their faces. What else could you ask for? In fact when you come to think of it, it makes a lot of sense. A punch of appreciation is more natural than a hug and kiss. So why make a emotionally wrought situation even more heavy by going the sentimental route? Use a humorous expression when you give your sister a card or gift. You can even pen down some of these lines and read them out on the eve of a family occasion. Your sister will like you even more for making her smile or laugh and putting a sparkle into the proceedings. These need not be restricted to your sisters alone, you can even use these quotations for close friends who are like family to you.
