Quail Hunting Quail hunting is one of the top sports for those on the upper crust of society. It is considered the top game or hunt of the aristocracy and is practiced by vice presidents and world leaders to this day. Quail hunting is typically considered this way because it demands a lot less of the hunter in comparison to other hunts. It does not take place in the morning, for example, or in the shivering cold. Instead, quail hunting can be done in relative comfort and can actually be quite stylish. For this reason, many people in the upper class of society try quail hunting. Quail hunting typically involves two hunters and a pair of dogs, typically called bird dogs. These dogs chase down the quail and retrieve the bird after the kill has been made. Often times, quail hunts are attended by spectators and watchers. There can be large crowds at quail hunts, gathering to watch the majesty of the sport unfold before their very eyes. There is something surreal and beautiful about quail hunting and watching the bird dogs do their work, making it one of the most interesting human experiences to be had. Proper gear is recommended when quail hunting. This includes having the proper boots for the fields and the marshlands. These pants also work to prevent thorns and briars from penetrating the pants, which is a common downfall to hunting quail in the brushes of North America. It is also recommended that the hunter wears a proper vest or a coat so that ammunition and other immediate supplies can be stored in it. The best option is something of a bright color so that the hunters will be obvious in the field and not confused with the quail. There is a certain formation and strategy to quail hunting that is very important. First, the dogs are sent to flush out the birds. As this is happening, the hunters are preparing their guns to be mounted on their shoulders. The safety of the gun should be kept on at all times until the gun is ready to be fired and mounted on the shoulder of the hunter. The gun barrels should be pointed to the sky, towards the prey, and away from any other hunter or from the ground. The two hunters should then follow the line of the dogs and maintain a straight line themselves, one hunter after the other. This formation is very important because of safety issues. Each hunter should have a mental note of where the other hunter is. The dogs should also be noted. This is to identify locations as to where the hunter should not point or swing his or her firearm. This should be also a way to divide the field up into sides. One side belongs to one hunter and so on. Once the sides are determined, the dogs will flush the quail into the air and the shooting begins. Hunters should stick to firing on their side of the range, so as to avoid danger and poor form. It should also be noted that low flying quail should be avoided at all costs. This is not only dangerous, but it has led to the unfortunate demise of many bird dogs because of the low shots. Keeping the guns high during a quail hunt is of vital importance so as to protect all of those involved in the hunt. With these safety precautions and gun etiquette tips in mind, quail hunting should be a remarkable and fun sporting event to take in. Bring some friends and get set for a lovely day in a field with the dogs.

The Quail King and the Hunter [Unity] Once upon a time, there was a Quail King who reigned over a flock of a thousand quails. There was also a very clever quail hunter.

Season long hunting availability. We provide the land, the hunter makes his own quail hunt. Most will agree a picture of a good hunting dog is better than a limit. This is Kelley, a field trial prospect reject. She turned into one very good hunting dog. Who We Are Mid-America Hunting Association has existed since providing private Kansas hunting land wild quail from its first day of existence. The Association hunters are entirely composed of average upland bird hunters who seek land access beyond that of public or knock-on-door. This is a self guided hunting organization. No guides or outfitters to say where, when or how to hunt. It is for those that enjoy hunting their own dogs. Late season hunting in Kansas showing part of a slow to rise covey, Tommy. Steady to point, wing and shot. It is located on an online road map library of all Kansas hunting land in inventory. The reservation is to a live person with immediate confirmation. We will assist with Kansas hunting recommendations based on these maps. Kansas private land hunting without knocking on doors or tracking down landowners. We will work at developing an itinerary for each hunting day. Once the reservations are made the hunter simply drives to the reserved Kansas land and hunts. No knocking on doors, no checking in with the landowner, no time spent not hunting. That one part about after the Association staff gives ideas of where to hunt and the reservation is made. The hunter is then responsible for the rest of his hunt. The tough part is the willingness to walk, shooting ability and dog power. The Association staff that does hunt their own upland bird dogs knows full well how hard wild Bobwhite hunts can be. Lodging is by local motel with a listing available from the Association. Hunters make their own reservations. Wild Quail Only On Natural Grain Farm Terrain All must have a willingness to walk as all hunting is on true wild quail over much grain field edge cover. More Kansas hunting land will be available to hunt each day than there will be daylight hours available. Each may be hunting a different spot each time stepping from the truck each day, every day of the trip without crossing his tracks or mixing dogs with another. Protective cover will be edge ranging from grass, to brush to mature trees. All will be along waterways, fence lines and wood patches adjoining grain fields. There is a tranquility to be gained from the satisfaction of having hunted enough at the end of each trip. That tranquility comes from the Kansas hunting land and the coveys are out there. It is the hunter hunts at his own pace to find them. It is the speed of that pace that often determines the coveys found. All without the distraction of being cutoff by another or knocking on doors hoping someone is home that may grant access. Dogs from the same Kansas hunters about 27 years apart above and below. That is Jon Nee at right. One of the two of us who will assist with recommendations of where to hunt. Kansas hunting also offers the most quail habitat variety. That habitat is over grain field edged with tree lines, fence rows, grassed waterways, brush and fallow ground. Next are the brush filled draws and through grain field waterways. The final cover that is unique to Kansas, will offer a chance at pheasants is the native or tall grass. Value Is More Than Quail In The Bag The best aspect often told to us by new to the Association hunters is the ability to go hunting without mixing dogs up with other hunters. Or, falling in on the heels of others. This leaves the day to those that enjoy the company of their dogs above all else. Many who hunt several years in the Association soon begin hunting alone from other hunters as they become a nuisance to the day with the dog. All may be hunting on their schedule, on game productive habitat at anytime during the Kansas season. The only way to beat what we offer is to lease your own twenty thousand acres of Kansas land and keep everyone off it. Until then we are the best average hunter Kansas option. Kansas also offers one more option to the do it yourself upland bird hunter. That is the Prairie Chicken. This added adventure of covering new ground after a different bird adds that extra bit of motivation we all need when the walks seem to get longer. For the Bobwhite Quail purist he will find that as well. The Kansas watershed grain farming region is where the coveys will be found. It is out from the tall grasslands and cattle range. It is in this country where the pheasant is as rare as the Prairie Chicken. This is where coveys have the transitional edge cover with warm weather bug and cold weather waste grain food sources that keep them anchored. Our Kansas winter weather allows good hunting through January. Never As

Digg This Article Upland bird hunting is among the finest forms of hunting in the world. For most folks, this means quail and pheasants, but it could mean grouse in some areas or even perdiz for those who want to go to South America. Some of the same gear and techniques generally work for all upland bird hunting, although there are subtle differences, depending on species. Wearing at least some orange-colored clothing is recommended, if not required, for upland bird hunting. The single most important factor in the winning equation is whether the hunt will be with or without dogs, and if with dogs, are the dogs pointers or flushers? Although the focus of this writing is on the guns and ammo front, which guns and which loads are best depends on the specific situation at-hand. Regardless what species is being pursued, there will be a lot of walking, which means carrying the gun, ammo, etc. More on that a little later. The main difference between good quail guns and good pheasant guns has to do with handling dynamics. Quail typically are kicked up at close distances. They hook around bushes and trees, and do not remain at much altitude for very long. This means that for the hunter to be successful, quail must be engaged and shot quickly. Hence, the best gun is fairly light and very lively – moves fast and goes on-target instantly. A neutral balance is nice weight between hands. Since the distances of shots on quail are relatively short, more open choking of the gun makes sense. If the hunt is over well-disciplined pointers, skeet chokes work great. For general quailing, improved cylinder works good for the larger gauges, while modified is better in the. Proper lead shot size for quail is No. Heavy Shot payloads are not necessary, so opt for lighter shot payload. Optimum quail guns range from 20 gauge on the heavy end to. The gauge in between can be totally awesome. There is nothing wrong with using or gauge guns on quail. They are, however, unnecessarily big and heavy for quail, but they can work fine. Barrel length is somewhat unimportant. Serious quail hunters often use guns with 25 or inch barrels. Type of gun also is somewhat unimportant. Single-shots can work fine. Guns and ammo for pheasant hunting need to be quite different, especially during the late season. If pointer dogs are used for pheasant, open choking also makes sense, or skeet choking if the dogs are really disciplined. Otherwise, improved cylinder and modified make the most sense. Usually the only time full chokes are needed is during the late season when the birds almost universally break from cover at longer distances. Another thing to consider in pheasant hunting is what kind of area is it? If it is some kind of tall, wild grass cover or even cut corn, be ready for some longer shots. If the cover is standing corn, be ready for close to medium-length shots for most of the field, and then longer shots right at the end of the field when they run from the corn and then take off soon after the hunter is still in the tall corn at that moment. Hence, , and gauge guns make the most sense for pheasant hunting I have taken pheasants with gauge and. In late season with gauge, go for No. For late season gauge steel, No 4 or No. Barrel length for good pheasant guns range generally from 26 to 30 inches, with inches a really nice compromise. Regardless the distance from the hunter to the quail or pheasant, when the bird breaks from cover, the quicker the hunter can get onto the bird for a shot, the better. If there is one mistake a lot of upland bird hunters make, it is to do the sequential things out of sequence. When a bird flushes without warning, often hunters recoil and then delay any action until they have fully identified the bird and then begin the gun mounting process. This delays the shot by as many as a dozen wingbeats for quail or by five yards for pheasant. Yes, it is necessary to identify the bird before pointing the gun at it, but there is a lot more in the process than just pointing the gun. Ideally, with both quail and pheasants, the optimum moment for the shot is just before or when the bird reaches its initial vertical apex. If the mounting process is delayed, the shot likely will be after the bird has leveled out. The idea is that the hunter is ready for a proper shot, but has the discipline to hold off when it is not a proper shot. This is much easier to demonstrate in the field than to explain in an article, but there is a totally safe and effective way to move into an upland bird shot. Or, put another way, standing flat-footed when a bird flushes is not the way to go. Shooting bushes and trees is a waste of ammo. If good pointing dogs are used, it is much easier for the hunter to be totally ready when the bird flushes, because the hunter or handler will give the dog the command to flush the bird. Safety is paramount in all hunting, and especially upland bird hunting. Even in areas where it is not required, it is a good idea for all involved dogs and humans to wear at least something that is blaze orange for upland birding. Wearing shooting glasses is always a good idea for all involved. Also, avoid shooting at extremely low-flying birds, especially if dogs are being used. Even if dogs are not on the hunt, it is not a good practice to shoot at low-flying birds, just on general principle, because sometime on some hunt, a low shot can cause unnecessary problems. As long as shotguns are pointed upward at the moment of the shot, only the birds will be hit. This helps preclude safety problems for other hunters and hunting dogs. Hunter And The Quail-Using a net, a hunter captures many birds each day. Following a wise quail's advice, the birds learn that by cooperating, they can lift up the net and escape.

There was also a very clever quail hunter. He knew how to make a quail call. Because this sounded just like a real quail crying for help, it never failed to attract other quails. Then the hunter covered them with a net, stuffed them in baskets, and sold them to make a living. Because he always put the safety of his flock first. Quail King was highly respected by all. While on the lookout for danger, one day he came across the hunter and saw what he did. He thought, "This quail hunter has a good plan for destroying our relatives. I must make a better plan to save us. He also invited other quails to attend the meeting. He said, "Greetings to our quail nation and welcome to our visitors. We are faced with great danger. Many of our relatives are being trapped and sold by a clever hunter. Then they are being killed and eaten. I have come up with a plan to save us all. When the hunter covers us with his net, every single one of us must raise his neck at the same time. Then, all together, we should fly away with the net and drop it on a thorn bush. That will keep him busy, and we will be able to escape with our lives. The next day the hunter lured the quails with his quail call as usual. But when he threw his net over them, they all raised up their necks at once, flew away with the net, and dropped it on a thorn bush. He could catch no quails at all! In addition, it took him the rest of the day to loosen his net from the thorns - so he had no time left to try again! The same thing happened on the following day. So he spent a second day unhooking his net from sharp thorns. She complained, "You used to bring home quail to eat, and money from selling quails. Now you return empty-handed. What do you do all day? You must have another wife somewhere, who is feasting on quail meat at this very moment! These days the quails have become very unified. They act as one, and raise up their necks and carry my net to a thorn bush. But thanks to you, my one and only wife, I know just what to do! Just as you argue with me, one day they too will argue, as relatives usually do. While they are occupied in conflict and bickering, I will trap them and bring them back to you. Then you will be pleased with me again. Until then, I must be patient. Then one morning after being lured by the quail call, it just so happened that one quail accidentally stepped on the head of another. He immediately got angry and squawked at her. Please excuse my mistake. Soon both of them were squawking and squawking, and the conflict got worse and worse! Hearing this bickering getting louder and louder, Quail King said, "There is no advantage in conflict. Continuing it will lead to danger! His own flock flew away at once. And it was just in time too! Suddenly the quail hunter threw his net over the remaining quails. The hunter grabbed all the quails, stuffed them in his baskets, and took them home to his wife. Of course she was overjoyed, and they invited all their friends over for a big quail feast. There is safety in unity, and danger in conflict.

One of the names of the god Shiva is Mrigavyadha, which translates as "the deer hunter" mriga means deer; vyadha means hunter. The word Mriga, in many Indian languages including Malayalam, not only stands for deer, but for all animals and animal instincts Mriga Thrishna. Shiva, as Mrigavyadha, is the one who destroys the animal instincts in human beings. In the epic Ramayana , Dasharatha , the father of Rama , is said to have the ability to hunt in the dark. During one of his hunting expeditions, he accidentally killed Shrivana , mistaking him for game. According to the Mahabharat , Pandu , the father of the Pandavas , accidentally killed the sage Kindama and his wife with an arrow, mistaking them for a deer. Krishna is said to have died after being accidentally wounded by an arrow of a hunter. Jainism teaches followers to have tremendous respect for all of life. Prohibitions for hunting and meat eating are the fundamental conditions for being a Jain. The general approach by all Buddhists is to avoid killing any living animals. Buddha explained the issue by saying "all fear death; comparing others with oneself, one should neither kill nor cause to kill. Many old Sikh Rehatnamas like Prem Sumarag , recommend hunting wild boar and deer. However, among modern Sikhs, the practise of hunting has died down; some even saying that all meat is forbidden. Christianity, Judaism, and Islam Ladies hunting in the 15th century Tapestry with a hunting scene, late 16th century From early Christian times, hunting has been forbidden to Roman Catholic Church clerics. Thus the Corpus Juris Canonici C. Ziegler, however De episc. In practice, therefore, the synodal statutes of various localities must be consulted to discover whether they allow quiet hunting or prohibit it altogether. It is important to note that most Christian, do not observe kosher dietary laws hence most Christian have no religious restrictions on eating the animals hunted. This is in accord with what is found in the Acts of the Apostles In Jewish law hunting is not forbidden although there is an aversion to it. The great 18th-century authority Rabbi Yechezkel Landau after a study concluded although "hunting would not be considered cruelty to animals insofar as the animal is generally killed quickly and not tortured There is an unseemly element in it, namely cruelty. Hunting in New Zealand New Zealand has a strong hunting culture. The islands making up New Zealand originally had no land mammals apart from bats. However, once Europeans arrived, game animals were introduced by acclimatisation societies to provide New Zealanders with sport and a hunting resource. Deer , pigs , goats , hare , tahr and chamois all adapted well to the New Zealand terrain, and with no natural predators, their population exploded. Government agencies view the animals as pests due to their effects on the natural environment and on agricultural production, but hunters view them as a resource. They would be headed by a master of the hunt, who might be styled mir-shikar. Often, they recruited the normally low-ranking local tribes because of their traditional knowledge of the environment and hunting techniques. Big game, such as Bengal tigers , might be hunted from the back of an elephant. Regional social norms are generally antagonistic to hunting, while a few sects , such as the Bishnoi , lay special emphasis on the conservation of particular species, such as the antelope. However, the Chief Wildlife Warden may, if satisfied that any wild animal from a specified list has become dangerous to human life, or is so disabled or diseased as to be beyond recovery, permit any person to hunt such an animal. In this case, the body of any wild animal killed or wounded becomes government property. Safari Explorer and big game hunter Samuel Baker chased by an elephant, illustration from A safari, from a Swahili word meaning "a long journey", especially in Africa, is defined as an overland journey. A safari may consist of a several-days " or even weeks-long journey, with camping in the bush or jungle , while pursuing big game. Nowadays, it is often used to describe tours through African national parks to watch or hunt wildlife. Hunters are usually tourists, accompanied by licensed and highly regulated professional hunters, local guides, skimmers , and porters in more difficult terrains. A special safari type is the solo-safari, where all the license acquiring, stalking, preparation, and outfitting is done by the hunter himself. United Kingdom See also: What in other countries is called "hunting" is called "shooting" birds or "stalking" deer in Britain. Originally a form of vermin control to protect livestock, fox hunting became a popular social activity for newly wealthy upper classes in Victorian times and a traditional rural activity for riders and foot followers alike. Similar to fox hunting in many ways is the chasing of hares with hounds. Pairs of Sight hounds or long-dogs , such as greyhounds , may be used to pursue a hare in coursing , where the greyhounds are marked as to their skill in coursing the hare but are not intended to actually catch it , or the hare may be pursued with scent hounds such as beagles or harriers. Other sorts of foxhounds may also be used for hunting stags deer or mink. Deer stalking with rifles is carried out on foot without hounds, using stealth. These forms of hunting have been controversial in the UK. Animal welfare supporters believe that hunting causes unnecessary suffering to foxes, horses, and hounds. Proponents argue that it is culturally and perhaps economically important. Using dogs to chase wild mammals was made illegal in February by the Hunting Act ; there were a number of exemptions under which the activity may not be illegal in the act for hunting with hounds, but no exemptions at all for hare-coursing. Shooting traditions Game birds, especially pheasants , are shot with shotguns for sport in the UK; the British Association for Shooting and Conservation says that over a million people per year participate in shooting, including game shooting, clay pigeon shooting , and target shooting. Shoots can be elaborate affairs with guns placed in assigned positions and assistants to help load shotguns. When in position, "beaters" move through the areas of cover, swinging sticks or flags to drive the game out. Such events are often called "drives". The definition of game in the United Kingdom is governed by the Game Act A similar tradition exists in Spain United States Hunting camp with dressed deer at Schoodic Lake, Maine , in An archer with a compound hunting bow Carrying a bear trophy head at the Kodiak Archipelago North American hunting pre-dates the United States by thousands of years and was an important part of many pre-Columbian Native American cultures. Native Americans retain some hunting rights and are exempt from some laws as part of Indian treaties and otherwise under federal law "examples include eagle feather laws and exemptions in the Marine Mammal Protection Act. This is considered particularly important in Alaskan native communities. Hunting is primarily regulated by state law ; additional regulations are imposed through United States environmental law in the case of migratory birds and endangered species. Regulations vary widely from state to state and govern the areas, time periods, techniques and methods by which specific game animals may be hunted. Some states make a distinction between protected species and unprotected species often vermin or varmints for which there are no hunting regulations. Hunters of protected species require a hunting license in all states, for which completion of a hunting safety course is sometimes a prerequisite. Typically, game animals are divided into several categories for regulatory purposes. Typical categories, along with example species, are as follows:
