

1: Good Hygiene Practices - Reducing the Spread of Infections and Viruses : OSH Answers

Demographics are key to sales in various categories. The growth in consumption of tissue and hygiene products is directly related to the population of a country.

The most important way to reduce the spread of infections is hand washing - always wash regularly with soap and water. Also important is to get a vaccine for those infections and viruses that have one, when available. This OSH Answers document will discuss other methods beyond hand washing that can also help to slow or stop the spread of infections. What are good practices to slow the spread of infections? Ways you can reduce or slow the spread of infections include: Get the appropriate vaccine. Wash your hands frequently. Stay home if you are sick so you do not spread the illness to other people. Use a tissue, or cough and sneeze into your arm, not your hand. Turn away from other people. Dispose of the tissue immediately. Wash your hands after coughing, sneezing or using tissues. If working with children, have them play with hard surface toys that can be easily cleaned. Do not touch your eyes, nose or mouth viruses can transfer from your hands and into the body. Do not share cups, glasses, dishes or cutlery. What can a workplace do? Workplaces can help by: Having an infection control plan. Providing clean hand washing facilities. Offering alcohol-based hand sanitizers when regular facilities are not available or to people on the road. Providing boxes of tissues and encourage their use. Reminding staff to not share cups, glasses, dishes and cutlery. Be sure dishes are washed in soap and water after use. Removing magazines and papers from waiting areas or common rooms such as tea rooms and kitchens. Making sure ventilation systems are working properly. In the event of a pandemic flu, the Public Health Agency of Canada states that wearing masks when face-to-face with coughing individuals will not be practical or helpful if the infection or virus has entered the community. Special handling of linen or waste contaminated with secretions from persons thought to be or who are sick is not required. If cleaning is necessary, how should it be done? Additional measures may be required to minimize the virus from transmitting by hard surfaces sinks, door and cupboard handles, railings, objects, counters, etc. The length of time a virus survives on hard surfaces depends on the type of virus. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in the United States indicates that "Most studies have shown that the flu virus can live and potentially infect a person for up to 48 hours after being deposited on a surface. Follow the directions on the cleaning or disinfecting products. Wear personal protective clothing, such as gloves or eye protection, where required. Know the appropriate procedures for general sanitation and infection control , and how to work safely with hazardous products , including bleach. Only in some workplaces, such as a hospital or health care facility, are specific cleaning and disinfection steps required. What is meant by social distancing? Social distancing is a strategy where you try to avoid crowded places, large gatherings of people or close contact with a group of people. In these situations, viruses can easily spread from person to person. In general, a distance of one metre 3 feet will slow the spread of a disease, but more distance is more effective. Should social distancing be recommended, steps to follow include: Use telephone, video conferencing, or the internet to conduct as much business as possible including within the same building. Allow employees to work from home, or to work flexible hours to avoid crowding the workplace. Cancel or postpone any travel, meetings, workshops, etc. Drive, walk, or cycle to work, but try to avoid public transit. Allow staff to eat at their desks or have staggered lunch hours to avoid crowded lunch rooms. Spend as little time as possible in tearooms or photocopy centres. When meetings are necessary, have the meeting in a larger room where people can sit with more space between them at least about one metre apart. Avoid shaking hands or hugging. Encourage staff to avoid social gatherings outside of work where they might come into contact with infectious people. What should a workplace do if an employee becomes ill at work? Reasons to determine "fitness to work" may depend on a number of issues such as job responsibilities of employees, ability to do the job safely, ease of working from home via internet , etc. Generally, employees should be allowed and encouraged to stay at home if they are not feeling well. However, in the event of a pandemic, use screening tools or a list of symptoms as a checklist. If employees are showing any signs, allow them to go or remain at home. If there is doubt if a person is sick, they should stay home until they feel well and are able to resume their regular activities. During a pandemic, information is likely to change rapidly.

Among those very important individuals who have inspired me, aside from my family, most, were my patients with special needs. I have learned more about kindness, honesty, and joy from these patients than from any textbook, class or continuing education course I have ever taken or attended. My patients motivated me day after day to get up every morning and to love my job no matter how challenging it was. Therefore, the theme for this year is about empowering, transforming and strengthening ties. Dental hygiene is a rewarding profession where hygienists are able to be caring, compassionate, and to love what they do. I would like to encourage all dental hygienists to be motivated and to wake up day after day loving their profession. Dental hygienists inspire patients, transform lives and more often than not, strengthen the relationships between patient and provider. As the NMDHA president, I will work on strengthening our profession so that dental hygienists in New Mexico can keep empowering, inspiring and transforming the lives of the patients they care for. I invite dental hygienists, members and non-members to actively participate in our association because together we are not just a number, we are stronger. Together, we have transformed the practice of dental hygiene in our state and we continue to do so. The future of dental hygiene is dependent on our strengths and unity as an association, on our ability to empower and inspire others to remain active and on our capacity to transform issues into opportunities for growth and success. Dental hygienists, when in harmony, are a powerful force that creates change and promotes unity above all. It is important that we continue to inspire others as we are inspired by many. We ought to embrace diversity as an important element of our association and the members we represent. We must educate the public and other healthcare providers on the functions of a dental hygienist and the crucial role we play in the interdisciplinary environment. We must pursue opportunities for dental hygienists in our state so that our profession remains strong and marketable. We must inspire change in order to protect our members from unstable and unethical work environments. In closing, I applaud you for being a member of our association and encourage you to empower others to join by visiting adha. I encourage prospective members to join, because united we are stronger and when we are stronger, we promote and inspire change and we strengthen our ties as a professional community.
