

1: Parish church - Wikipedia

Our parish transitioned from being a "Parish council" to a Pastoral council 7 years ago and used this booklet. This easy to read booklet which nicely references Canon law, is a terrific guide as it clearly points out the new role of a Pastoral Council.

It is even more likely that you have come across church bullies if you have been involved with church leadership. Of course, bullies are everywhere in the world, and are not limited to churches. Bullying is hot button issue these days, and bullying is something many people are trying to draw attention to so that it can be eliminated. Yet still, bullying can be hard to identify. Bullying can be psychological, emotional and physical. Image Source –” http: Most church people have been taught to be nice and kind, to refrain from stirring the pot or rocking the boat. Church bullies know that often people will not stand up to them, and that they can get away with just about anything. In that post, I linked a Louis C. He said white people are not better, but being white is clearly better. Warning, this video contains offensive language. Church bullying is the same. Being a bully is the easiest way to get what you want. Churches are groups where people usually have to work together, and work out how to live as a community. Bullying, however, means you can get anything and everything you want. You can bend people to your wills and desires without giving anything up in return. Bullying is the easiest way to get what you want. Bullies can offer anonymous feedback. Churches are already pretty good at not requiring people to stand behind what they say. We send out surveys and feedback tools that remain anonymous. But bullies have it really great. They can send anonymous emails to leaders. Bullies often have gossip clubs. Bullies are often supported in a small group that likes to keep up on the latest church gossip. This kind of group can meet for coffee during the week or lunch on Sundays or any number of places. As a bully, you can find allies who are ready to support you, who will offer behind-the-scenes support to your behind-the-scenes bullying. It is always easier to bully when you can be confident you are supported by, or acting on behalf of a club. People will worry that challenging bullies is unkind or unchristian. The vast majority of church members worry that their behaviour could be perceived as unkind or unchristian. You know, Jesus never stood up to anyone and never challenged bad behaviour. You can use your anxiety against others. Anxiety and fear are contagious. Use this your advantage. As a bully, if you can get others to take on your worries, your fears, your issues, your anxiety, most people especially church people will do almost anything to relieve you and therefore themselves of your fears. Use this to your advantage. As human beings we have often been taught that we have two responses to anxiety –” Fight or Flight. There are 3 –” Fight, Flight or Freeze. The best bullies know that freeze is the most common response. If you can make others anxious, you know that their first response will be to do nothing. Bullies know this tactic well. It is much easier to bully from the shadows than in the open. Write anonymous letters and emails that you can deny came from you. Make life miserable for people in private, and be an angel in the open. Hide in plain sight. You can play the victim card when caught. So what do you do when someone actually calls you on your bullying? Why accuse them of being the bully, of course! Most people will get so worried that they are bullying you that they will forget all about the fact that you were bullying them first. You never want to defend your own actions, so make other people defend theirs –” play the victim card. The stakes are low for you but high for others. One of the great things about being a church bully is that the stakes are pretty low. What could happen to you? Churches will rarely kick you off the membership list. Pastors have jobs to keep, leaders have to tend to running the place. Growing up and being mature is really hard. Bullying means you can stay the same. The congregational system read: Great church bullies know that individuals might challenge them, but the system will work to maintain the status quo. Intelligent individuals will cease thinking straight in a group and will seek to silence those who oppose bullies and therefore advocate change in the system since is it easier to maintain the norm. Feel confident that almost all of the group behaviour in a church is there to support your bullying. This is the best part of being a bully of course. You can claim you are speaking for the wronged, the victimized, the silent majority or minority, but really it is all about you. Your needs, your wants, your feelings, your ideas. You are numero uno, and thinking about others only gets in the way of taking care of you. So put yourself first and you will be a great bully. Bullying happens because most bullies know to use our anxiety, our fears, and our emotions against us. Most of us would much rather just avoid conflict altogether, and it is much easier to give in to make the bullying stop than to challenge it. Bullying in the church makes me crazy. Upsetting the bully would cause so much stress on the church, that their behaviour is permitted, condoned even. Some commenters here and on Facebook have mentioned that Pastors can be bullies too. I want to be clear that anyone can be a church bully. Regular members, pastors, bishops, leaders, etc. It is time for the bullying to end. Standing up to bullies means recognizing our own anxieties and need to be liked. Standing up means risking being unpopular, it means risking the wrath of the system that protects the bullies. Standing up means knowing all the advantages that bullies have to lose see the list above , and not underestimating how far bullies will go to retain their power and privilege. Ending bullying means change. Sometimes it might land you on a cross. Are church bullies the worst? Been bullied at church? Share in the comments, on Facebook or on Twitter:

2: What's Wrong With a Drive-Thru Parish

Share Article When it comes to finding the perfect place of worship, U. Other times, you have to see many places before finally finding the perfect match or simply settling on the least bad option. There are several questions to consider during this process. Does the house have a convenient location? Is it the right size for your family? How does the neighborhood seem? Most important, is this a place that you can see yourself calling home? Catholic readers and website visitors ask many of the same questions when choosing a parish. Only 39 percent of survey respondents say that they attend the parish closest to their home, suggesting that most people are willing to travel to find the parish that is the best for them. One third of respondents indicated a willingness to travel more than 30 miles to a parish if they felt it was right for them. But about five years ago I moved closer to this parish because I spend so much time here. Nearly 60 percent of survey takers say they have been at their current parish for more than five years. Some parishioners, such as Willie Stevens of St. Louis, prefer to exclusively shop for parishes rather than settle down. Forty percent of survey takers say that they need to attend a parish at least two or three times before deciding whether or not it is the parish they want to belong to. For Karen Schmitt of Memphis, the answer is easy. For 84 percent of respondents, quality liturgy is the most important factor for determining whether to stick with a parish or keep looking for somewhere else to attend. Pennsylvania resident Mary Curran specifically examined the quality of the preaching. Ostlund of Portland, Oregon, it can make a difference whether the parish is run by a congregation of priests, with Ostlund having a personal preference for the Paulists. Reasons for choosing a parish can be as simple as convenient Mass times for busy schedules or the style of music a parish uses. Geri Collecchia of Pembroke Pines, Florida lists support of social justice initiatives as an essential quality to her ideal parish. The crucial factors are as varied as the diverse community of the global church. When asked to list the qualities that are most important in choosing a parish, people included size of the parish, availability of a parochial school, parish decision-making strategies, accessibility for people with disabilities, and openness to gay and lesbian parishioners. This should just be extra motivation to join that parish. I need a sense of community and an active parish that encourages participation and offers opportunities for spiritual growth and formation. Jim Sullivan of Seattle agrees. After shopping around for the right parish, Elizabeth Begley of Suffern, New York believes she has come to find her spiritual home. I have been attending my current parish for:

3: I Like Being in Parish Ministry: The Assembly

Mark F. Fischer extends a straightforward invitation to pastoral parish council members and those thinking of being a part of the council to be informed participants. With practical suggestions and clear definitions, he opens the window on the spiritual as well as the action dimensions of this ministry.

When you really think about it, everyone should be Catholic! Alyson Utterback December 2, at It is a faith of forgiveness and life. Edison Tapalla December 2, at 1: He calls me to keep my eyes on Him always, and the more I fall in love with Him, the more he draws me to His Church. Gray December 2, at 1: Where else would I go? Fran December 2, at 1: There is so much beauty and good to discover! Timothy Canny December 2, at 2: What a bunch of great heavenly friends to have! Susan Vogt December 2, at 2: Amy December 2, at 2: I know it is always there for me, I just need to use it! Mary Carter December 2, at 4: Being Catholic has brought me closer to Jesus as He is within me always. The community we have is like none other. You could go to mass anywhere in the world and still here the same readings and gospel being proclaimed. We have such a rich history and we truly stand for what we believe. We have our sacred Traditions and many role models to follow in the steps of Jesus such as popes and saints. Being catholic has brought me such a sense of peace. I have learned so much from my faith and I will continue to learn as God is with me and the Holy Spirit continues to guide me. Dan Kahlig December 2, at 4: Today, because Jesus never gave up on this sinner I am on fire for Him and the Catholic faith. I love being Catholic because the Sacraments give me the Grace to know, love, and serve Him. I love knowing that because of my Faith, I have a connection to the early Church Fathers who were so convinced that what Jesus taught was True they would give their lives as martyrs. I love knowing that Catholic Priests have the power to turn bread and water into the Body and Blood of Jesus, and that through a Priest I can have my sins forgiven. My Catholic faith is a gift that sustains me. Jane December 2, at 4: I love the real presence we are all invited to share in, and the ineffable peace and beauty of being literally united with Jesus, just by virtue of His gracious and humble sharing of Himself. I love the Blessed Mother, and our Catholic devotion to her totally accepting and welcoming and loving and maternal embrace. I love the sacrament of Reconciliation, leading us kindly back to God, when we fail out of human weakness. I am thankful for our beautiful Catholic devotions that strengthen us in good times and prepare us times of sorrow. I love the Holy Father, Pope Benedict XVI, who guides us with a loving, truthful paternal hand toward a sacred human love, whatever our state in life. And I love our priests and religious, who so unite themselves with Jesus, that they bring forth justice and peace in our fallen world every day. Lisa Mladinich December 2, at 4: It has the power of all seven sacraments, the Papacy, the Magisterium, belief in saints, holy souls, angels, and an extraordinary history of making the world a better place through scientific inquiry, patronage of the arts, mission hospitals and schools, advocacy for the disenfranchised, disaster relief, and on and on. Sarah Reinhard December 2, at 4: I think, at the heart of it, I love being Catholic because there is never a dull moment. The Church exists in order to Bring the Gospel Message to the world and the treasures of the Church are rich and plentiful! Nathan Eten December 2, at 5:
