Both aspects of this hybrid home are managed by people, real live actual people with whom you will have a personal experience. You can ask the Internet a question, but how will it respond? I like people of all ages and from all over the world. Each one is a story, and each one has different levels of needs when they come seeking a librarian. I like finding out how I can help. I like puzzles, riddles, word games, treasure hunts, mysteries, conundrums, codes, challenges. Data is just squiggles and bits unless it provides an answer or fills a gap in my knowledge base, and then it becomes information. I like organizing information. Classification and cataloging become exciting when I keep Check 1 in mind: I try to make it easy, simple, and logical for them to find Dewey notwithstanding! And what I like the most is putting 1, 2, 3, and 4 together. Sounds like I like being a librarian. But, frankly, the people who keep me motivated are those who ask the craziest, most off-the-wall, and most unexpected questions. I relish a satisfying dialogue, the give-and-take and sharing of information that benefits both of us. Okay, granted, it is a luxury to indulge in and perhaps not the role of a librarian to establish, best left to the classroom, but every once in a while someone gives me that Socrates-inspired fix I had to leave behind when I left teaching. And one particular patron comes to mind. I am scheduled out of Technical Services to work the Reference Desk on Wednesday evenings and every fourth weekend. I often find that Saturday mornings have quieter hours and fewer requests for immediate help, so when he calls then, for that moment, he has my complete attention. He sees something and ponders its significance. He hears about something and wants it verified. I remember when I took his first question. He wondered about an old cast iron cook stove he had seen illustrated in a magazine article. What are those boxes above the burners for? Warming shelves for plates or food, but my mom used them sometimes to dry newly-born baby chicks or kittens in the cold northern weather! We discussed kerosene and propane gas stoves, and traced their evolution to the modern ceramic cook top. On another day his question was prompted by a television travel show. He is a master of linking a chain of questions that hook me into one search after another. Those are some pretty big mountains, those Alps. I told him that I had driven through both the St. Gotthard passes several times in the early winter, before they were closed because of the snowfall, and knew what marvels of engineering they were. How old is the earth? Does the Bible mention them? We discussed possible small, feathered descendants and a reptilian cousin, the Komodo dragon. About a four-hour drive away. I was just curious. Well, maybe you do! Does a wild duck taste the same as a farm duck? Sometimes the wild ducks—"mallards"—would land in among our few Long Island whites to eat the corn we fed ours. Wild duck are not as fatty as farm-raised ducks, and what ducks eat in the wild affects how the meat tastes. I never thought of that. Just imagine the taste of the ducks that live along a riverbank and eat crayfish and clams! They got duck on sale at the store—might go buy some and try it. He slowly digests answers, still apologizing for asking. Yet, through his queries, he gives me glimpses of what it was like growing up here—valuable information for me, a transplant. He has never offered his name. I want him to stay a disembodied voice. I am never annoyed by his calls. I am well-aware that he wants to keep asking more and more questions, and I allow him the time I have whenever possible. I suspect that the human interaction he receives is just as gratifying to him as the answers he gets. However, he demurs when I invite him to come to the library to learn our OPAC and online library databases so he could do his own searches. Is all that beyond his comfort level? Is it even possible for him? He validates why I chose librarianship. I happily travel on his thought-strings because we both learn so much more about the world we live in along the way.

2: Dave Matthews Band - The Stone Lyrics | MetroLyrics

'I was just wondering' is another way of saying 'I was just asking myself something, I was thinking about something, I was curious about something.' Greyfriar, Jan 12, #2.

These forty-five essays were taken over a five year period. As you will see from the quotes below it is a book worth the read. We lack unity because long ago a gap fissured open between our mortal and immortal parts; theologians trace the fault line back to the Fall. Lewis Jesus announced a great reversal of values in His Sermon on the Mount, elevating not the rich or attractive, but rather the poor, the persecuted, and those who mourn. I asked him to name the one quality missing in the local church that AA had somehow provided. He stared at his cup of coffee for a long time, watching it go cold. I expected to hear a word like love or acceptance or, knowing him, perhaps anti-institutionalism. Instead, he said softly one word: Judgment without love makes enemies, not converts. I tell you, no! But unless you repent, you too will all perish. Or those eighteen who died when the tower in Siloam fell on them – do you think they were more guilty than all the others living in Jerusalem? What should a plague teach us? Humility, for one thing. And gratitude that God has so far withheld the judgment all of us deserve. And compassion, the compassion that Jesus displayed to all who mourn and suffer. Finally, catastrophe joins together victim and bystander in a common call to repentance, by abruptly reminding us of the brevity of life. It warns us to make ourselves ready in case we are the next victim of a falling tower – or an AIDS virus. Ah, they deserve their punishment; watch them squirm. Those men managed to change the world. Because children have abounding vitality, because they are in spirit fierce and free, therefore they want things repeated and unchanged. For grown-up people are not strong enough to exult in monotony. But perhaps God is strong enough to exult in monotony. It may not be automatic necessity that makes all daisies alike; it may be that God makes every daisy separately, but has never got tired of making them. It may be that He has the eternal appetite of infancy; for we have sinned and grown old, and our Father is younger than we. But this is the first and great commandment nonetheless. Even in the wilderness – especially in the wilderness – you shall love Him.
