To truly laugh, you must be able to take your pain, and play with it.*

When A Fish Called Wanda was released in Denmark in , a man named Ole Bentzen was so tickled by the scene where Ken gets chips up his nose that he laughed himself into oblivion. You see, Bentzen apparently had a similar experience around his dinner table when he and his family put pieces of cauliflower up their noses. The scene made him think of this cauliflower incident, which made him laugh so hard that his heartbeat allegedly escalated to between beats a minute, causing a fatal heart attack. I believe this is the scene that did it: When the bombed burro tried to eat some figs, Chrysippus laughed himself six feet under. Laugh at yourself regularly and life will seem less of a struggle Do you have the courage to laugh at yourself? Millions of people take themselves and their lives so seriously that they refuse to recognize the absurdity of much of what they do. Not that everything in life is a laughing matter. But have you ever encountered a single who had a chip on their shoulder? They spend much of their time complaining how everyone is out to get them. It seems as if they get out of the wrong side of the bed--every day. Could that be you? If you can laugh at yourself, odds are you experience less tension, less worry, and better health. You have the priceless ability to put things in their proper perspective. Several years ago, I knew some people who were almost incapable of poking fun at themselves. They had a certain image they worked very hard to maintain, and the harder they tried, the sillier they seemed to the rest of us. Laughter is a gift from God. Sure, there are times that demand seriousness, but much of the posturing we do in life is pretty pretentious, and we need to recognize that. Who better to laugh at? Many people are highly sensitive. Which comedian was more beloved--Rodney Dangerfield, who poked fun at himself, or Don Rickles, who made fun of other people? Some leaders refuse to make light of their idiosyncracies because they feel their subordinates will lose respect for them. This is no laughing matter--or is it? Their situation certainly was nothing to joke about, but Frankl observed that the people who would survive fought to retain as much of their pre-internment personality as possible--including their sense of humor. When you laugh at yourself, you release a built-in safety valve. You steal power from your troubles. How to laugh at yourself, even a little Desperation can make many of us singles too serious. We see every first date as a life-or-death situation. We tense up on meeting new people, terrified of making a bad impression. We try too hard because it feels like the fate of the world depends on whether this person likes us or not. If you can laugh at actors in those kinds of situations, can you find the daring to laugh at yourself? If you can, you not only lessen the degree of the catastrophe if something does go wrong, but you also greatly improve the chances that the new person will find you human, likable, and attractive. Slowly at first, in small doses, and in appropriate situations. Become comfortable with yourself. See how people react. We all need to lighten up and not make everything a matter of life and death. Will it really matter a year from now? Twenty years from now? A sense of humor helps you keep things in their proper perspective.

7: Laugh At Yourself Quotes, Quotations & Sayings

If you can laugh at yourself, odds are you experience less tension, less worry, and better health. You have the priceless ability to put things in their proper perspective.

David How is your sense of humour? I think the real test of your sense of humour is your ability to laugh at yourself. If you can laugh at yourself and your own mistakes it means you have a strong sense of self-worth: A good sense of humour can empower you to press on through difficulties. Laughing can give you strength to endure stressful situations. It gives you the ability to see difficulties from a different perspective. Laughter and levity of heart are powerful antidotes to self-pity and discouragement. I will let this humorous story about a commercial diver convey my sentiments. Last week I had a bad day at the office. Before I can tell you what happened to me, I first must bore you with a few technicalities of my job. As you know, my office lies at the bottom of the sea. I wear a suit to the office. This time of year the water is quite cool. So what we do to keep warm is this: It heats it to a delightful temperature. It then pumps it down to the diver through a garden hose, which is taped to the air hose. What I do, when I get to the bottom and start working, is take the hose and stuff it down the back of my wet suit. This floods my whole suit with warm water. Everything was going well until all of a sudden, my butt started to itch. So, of course, I scratched it. This only made things worse. Within a few seconds my butt started to burn. I pulled the hose out from my back, but the damage was done. In agony I realized what had happened. The hot water machine had sucked up a jellyfish and pumped it into my suit. When I scratched what I thought was an itch, I was actually grinding the jellyfish into the crack of my butt. I informed the dive supervisor of my dilemma over the communicator. His instructions were unclear due to the fact that he, along with five other divers, were all laughing hysterically. Needless to say, I aborted the dive. I was instructed to make three agonizing in-water decompression stops totaling thirty-five minutes before I could reach the surface to begin my chamber dry decompression. When I arrived at the surface, I was wearing nothing but my brass helmet. As I climbed out of the water, the medic, with tears of laughter running down his face, handed me a tube of cream and told me to rub it on my butt as soon as I got in the chamber.
