Short Today is the first day of my new job as a teacher at the high school I once graduated from. I was in and out of the shower, dressed and. Ready, coffee in hand by 5: I fumbled around a little in the darkness while trying to get into my car, but I eventually got it. I started to drive down my street. I had to take it slow due to ice. A black figure began to appear in my field of vision. It was the shape of a man, in all black, walking slowly down the road. This struck as odd to me. It had to be at least -2 degrees outside! And this guy is walking! Everything moved in slow motion as I thought about what he might be doing here.. Why would he be walking.. Where would he be walking to.. Then my mind began to be enveloped by my fear senses and I began thinking things that were completely irrational. His form becoming clearer as I inched closer with my headlights. I could make out more of his form now. He was wearing a black work coat, it appeared to be dirty. And covered in snow. He was wearing black pants and combat boots. The laces were not tied. A hood from presumably another jacket beneath the work coat hid his head from view. With a description like that, there were two possibilities in my mind. Eventually realising how insane I was being over a man walking, I snapped myself back to reality and shook of my dreadful thinking. I brushed off whatever trance I was in, and continued driving towards him. He stood there in my headlights. And as soon as I noticed he had stopped, I slammed on my breaks and halted as well. But I do now.. He started to turn towards me. He was going to look at me. As he slowly turned me heart pumped faster. Then, to my horror, I finally saw the face of this man.. If you could even call it a man! His eyes were shrouded in a blackness that was darker than the night around us. His white pupils glowed in the centre of those pits as he stared into my very being. In its place, was a crude sewing together of the flesh around it, pulling his skin tightly across his bony face. His lips were non-existent, revealing every single one of his jagged, chipped, decaying teeth. His gums were rotted and frostbitten. And he was as pale as the snow around him. I was certain I was going to die here. But survival instincts kicked in, and I put the pedal to the floor. I drove straight at the thing. But when I got within feet of him, he vanished completely. Sending me in a head-on collision with a telephone pole. I was sent through the wind-shield and into the snow below. As soon as I hit the ground my body began going numb. Besides a pain in my chest, and a shooting pain down my left arm.. I was going to die there.. My vision began to fade, and as it did I looked up.. To find him towering over me.. Staring down at me.. Then, everything went black. I woke up in a hospital bed the next morning. Apparently the neighbours were awakened by the crash and found me just in time. When the police asked me what had happened I gave them a description of the man. Of course, they thought it was some sort of hallucination. So here I am. Sitting in this room. My friend came to visit me today. The friend I met that night. The friend who tried to show me the true world. Telling me everything is going to be ok. I belong to him. He was always watching me. From the day I was born until the day I die.
