

1: Another Country (novel) - Wikipedia

To ask other readers questions about In Another Country and Other Short Novels, please sign up. Be the first to ask a question about In Another Country and Other Short Novels Four novellas, each very different--so much so that I couldn't proceed directly from one to another!--each very good. I.

Adams A general practitioner and emergency surgeon who lives near a lake on the northern peninsula of Michigan. Using makeshift surgical instruments, he delivers a baby boy to an American Indian woman who has been in excruciating labor for two days. Adams to the camp and with the help of three American Indian men, holds the American Indian woman down while Dr. Adams performs a cesarean. American Indian Woman Having screamed for two days while trying to give birth, she is helped by Dr. Adams, who makes an incision in her with a jackknife and delivers a boy. American Indian Husband The presumed father of the baby that Dr. Adams delivers by cesarean surgery is found dead in his bed. Hearing his wife scream for two days and during the painful, crude surgery drives him mad. Silently and secretly, he cuts his throat. Henry Adams A proud doctor who is ashamed and angry that he is teased by American Indians hired to cut up logs that broke loose from a White and McNally shipment to a sawmill downstream. Nick The son of Dr. Adams, Nick blindly hero-worships his father. Nick Adams A young man about nineteen who tries to warn a boxer that is about to be shot by a couple of hired killers. Sam The Black cook at the diner. Al One of the hired killers; he wears a black overcoat, silk muffler, gloves, and a derby hat. Al ties up Nick and Sam. Max The other hired killer. He too wears a too-tight black topcoat and a derby hat. According to Al, Max talks too much, revealing their plans to kill Ole Andreson. Ole Andreson A boxer who has probably double-crossed someone, and this someone has, in turn, hired Al and Max to kill Ole. Italian Second Lieutenant He is reluctant to allow Nick to talk to the captain of the Italian military unit. The Major "Signor Maggiore" Once a champion fencer, his right hand is now severely withered because of an industrial accident. To himself, he seems a coward, but the next day, he demonstrates his bravery but is killed at the moment of his triumph. She refuses to divorce him because of his money, but he cannot divorce her because of her beauty. Margot is delighted when Francis runs from the lion; this gives her more psychological control over him. Robert Wilson The guide for the Maccombers on this safari, he is the essence of the Hemingway code character. He does not follow the laws and rules of society; instead, he has his own code of conduct, to which he rigidly conforms. The Beaters African natives who beat the grass to flush wild game into the open. Kongoni and Abdulla The gun-bearers: The Girl Referred to by the young man as "Jig," she is trying to decide whether or not to have an abortion; she slowly becomes increasingly angry as the young man minimizes her dilemma. The Old Man About 80 years old and deaf, the old man is drinking brandy in the very early hours of the morning in a Spanish cafe. Now, dying of gangrene, he realizes that he will never be able to write the great fiction that he had envisioned. He is painfully conscious of his defeat and loss. Helen is a loyal, loving, affectionate, and courageous woman. Molo The servant who tends to Harry; his main function is to pour enough liquor in Harry so that Harry can stand the pain of his wound and that of utter disappointment. Compson The aviator who is supposed to arrive and take Harry to a hospital.

2: In Another Country Themes - www.enganchecubano.com

The short novel or novella format is a favorite of Silverberg and this book showcases his skills. Novellas give the author enough scope to develop an idea without the detailed structure that a full book would require.

Every week, a different topic is suggested by Cassandra and participants list what they think are the 5 best books for that topic. Click HERE to see the topics for the next few weeks. This week, the topic is 5 Books set in a foreign country. This book is about a butler, Stevens, in England in the 1930s, when hardly anyone has butlers anymore. He is very loyal to his American boss, who turns out not to be quite such a nice person. Stevens describes the man in the best possible way, but between the lines you can read what sort of a man the boss really is. Also, Stevens is so loyal that he passes up on his one chance to romance. Really I could have chosen any of these books by Murakami: I like them all a lot! Most of what happens, could happen in reality, but there is something not quite right about it. I find this intriguing and good fun. Under the Skin by Michel Faber is my third choice. This is the debut novel by the writer of The Crimson Petal and the White, another book that I loved, but that is very different from this one. They are quite attracted to her larger-than-life breasts. The woman sometimes drops the men off as arranged but other times she's not what you might expect! He is an immediate suspect and a search party is formed. Several different teams of people go looking for the boy, all experiencing their own adventure in the harsh Canadian wilderness. Although it is a murder mystery at heart, it is much more than that. And my last choice is Chocolat by Joanne Harris. This book, set in France, tells the story of a mother and daughter who settle in a small town in rural France to start a chocolate shop. The local priest turns against them when they want to hold a chocolate festival on a Sunday. But one by one the villagers fall under the spell of Vianne, the shop owner. Add into the equation a handsome gypsy-type man that comes to her rescue a few times, and you have the ingredients for a magical and romantic story.

3: Read Around the World | Delightful Children's Books

With the simultaneous publication of four collections of short novels by some of the genre's leading writers, Five Star Publishing introduces a new series intended to highlight significant contributions to short sf and fantasy.

Nick is dubious of the machine and the therapy, as is a friend of his, an Italian major who is also undergoing therapy with a machine that exercises his hand that was injured in an industrial accident. In contrast, the major never brags about his own bravery. He is deeply depressed and finally reveals to Nick that his young wife has just died. When the story was first published, many readers were puzzled about what this story was about. Read within the context of the other Nick Adams stories, this question is easily solved. From the other stories, we realize that Nick Adams is honest, virile, and, more important, a person of extreme sensitivity. By observing the particular state of mind of the young narrator at the beginning of the story, we see that what happens to the major makes a tremendous impact on the young, wounded soldier. The deer hung stiff and heavy and empty. It was warm, standing in front of her charcoal fire, and the chestnuts were warm afterwards in your pockets. Structurally, Hemingway creates three recurrent ideas: Wounded, Nick feels that the three Italians with medals are "hunting hawks," men who lived by the importance attached to their medals. In contrast, the major who has many medals never talks about them. Additionally, Nick feels that he has not served as a participant in the war. He feels alienated from the three "hawks" and aligns himself with the young soldier who was wounded in the face, who was not at the front "long enough to be tested. Then the story shifts, and we meet the major, undergoing physical therapy and using a machine nearby the machine that Nick is using. Like many future Hemingway heroes, the major has been at the top of his craft; he was once the finest fencer in Italy, but now his fencing hand is wounded, stunted, and withered. Furthermore, the major has been awarded three medals and yet never mentions them because he does not believe in touting bravery. Furthermore, the major does not believe in the so-called therapeutic success of the machines, yet he continues to come to the hospital and use them. Nick does not understand this contradiction at first because, for the major, the machines represent a discipline that is necessary for the Hemingway code hero. In a similar way, the major insists that Nick speak Italian that is grammatically correct. The major is sardonic about doctors; his comments are filled with veiled contempt. When a doctor tells Nick that he will play football again, the major wants to know if he too will ever play football again. The major cannot resign himself to the loss of his wife. He is crushed, shattered by the news. First, he creates an older, seasoned code hero, a man who has confronted life and has experienced the hard, cruel world but has not given in to any display of emotion; he has carefully refrained from baring his emotions except in this very rare case of the death of his young wife. He never talks of his own bravery or his courage or his exploits on the battlefield; he lives a highly disciplined life until he has to confront the death of his wife. Second, in contrast to the older code character, we have the initiate "€" here, young Nick Adams, the innocent soldier who is just entering into a world of war and violence. Glossary in the fall possibly an autumn during , the last year of World War I. Hemingway was injured in July while delivering chocolates and cigarettes to Italian soldiers stationed on the Piave River. It is an account of how Nick copes with shell shock, or what is known today as post-traumatic stress syndrome, and the visual reminders and residue of death, destruction, and loss. Seeing the bodies of the Italians and Austrians piled up and rotting in the heat in Italy becomes an inescapable image for Nick. They are all resting and undergoing physical therapy. While there, Nick observes the behavior of his older and higher-ranking friend, the major. Additionally, Nick learns what it is to be disciplined, even if he does not entirely believe in what he is doing.

4: James Baldwin: Early Novels & Stories | Library of America

Note: Citations are based on reference standards. However, formatting rules can vary widely between applications and fields of interest or study. The specific requirements or preferences of your reviewing publisher, classroom teacher, institution or organization should be applied.

TED Amazon Ann Morgan considered herself well read “until she discovered the “massive blindspot” on her bookshelf. Amid a multitude of English and American authors, there were very few books from beyond the English-speaking world. So she set an ambitious goal: Watch her full TED Talk: See more at Ted. Born in Algeria, his life was once devoted to Sundays with his mother, family reunions, pious sobriety, and devout Islamism. And for a sex life free of prohibitions! Thus his adventures begin. Unfortunately for him, but to the delight of the reader, his story is filtered through a rather unsympathetic female narrator who refuses to show our hero the attention he feels he deserves. Aguilar, an unemployed literature professor who has resorted to selling dog food for a living, returns home from a short trip to discover that his wife, Agustina, has gone mad. After two separate catastrophes, two very different families leave the country for the bright lights of Perth. The Pickleses are gamblers, boozers, fractious, and unlikely landlords. Change, hardship, and the war force them to swallow their dignity and share a great, breathing, shuddering house called Cloudstreet. Living in restrictive Riyadh but traveling all over the globe, these modern Saudi women literally and figuratively shed traditional garb as they search for love, fulfillment, and their place somewhere in between Western society and their Islamic home. Her new relationship with a married man “the antithesis of Rei” has brought her life to a numbing stasis, and her relationships with her mother and daughter have spilled into routine, day after day. Kei begins making repeated trips to the seaside town of Manazuru, a place that jogs her memory to a moment in time she can never quite locate. Her time there by the water encompasses years of unsteady footing and a developing urgency to find something. Through a poetic style embracing the surreal and grotesque, a quiet tenderness emerges from these dark moments. Manazuru is a meditation on memory—a profound, precisely delineated exploration of the relationships between lovers and family members. Both startlingly restless and immaculately compact, Manazuru paints the portrait of a woman on the brink of her own memories and future. Tolkien and, most of all, finding love. But Oscar may never get what he wants. Encapsulating Dominican-American history, The Brief Wondrous Life of Oscar Wao opens our eyes to an astonishing vision of the contemporary American experience and explores the endless human capacity to persevere—and risk it all—in the name of love. The author, born in Addis Ababa and now living in New York, tells the story in unforgettable detail: Author of some pieces of fiction that have been compared to the works of Poe, Kipling, and Jack London, Quiroga experienced a life that surpassed in morbidity and horror many of the inventions of his fevered mind His stories are infused with death, too, but they span a wide range of short fiction genres: Shafak effortlessly blends East and West, past and present, to create a dramatic, compelling, and exuberant tale about how love works in the world. In this extraordinary tale, Tor Baz, the young boy descended from both chiefs and outlaws who becomes the Wandering Falcon, moves between the tribes of Pakistan and Afghanistan and their uncertain worlds full of brutality, humanity, deep love, honor, poverty, and grace. The wild area he travels -- the Federally Administered Tribal Area -- has become a political quagmire known for terrorism and inaccessibility. Yet in these pages, eighty-year-old debut author Jamil Ahmad lyrically and insightfully reveals the people who populate those lands, their tribes and traditions, and their older, timeless ways in the face of sometimes ruthless modernity. This story is an essential glimpse into a hidden world, one that has enormous geopolitical significance today and still remains largely a mystery to us. Written in English, the novel tells the story of Tsono, a young Bhutanese woman who embarks on the difficult and lonely journey of life. All the while, Tsono seeks to find herself and a life partner, and grows as a person and a woman. The text of this unusual work is enriched by detailed descriptions of ritual life in Bhutan. The brief narrative, written as an extended letter, is a sequence of reminiscences—some wistful, some bitter—recounted by recently widowed Senegalese schoolteacher Ramatoulaye Fall. This semi-autobiographical account is a perceptive testimony to the plight of educated and articulate Muslim women. Angered by the traditions that allow polygyny, they inhabit a social milieu dominated by attitudes and values that deny them status equal to men. The classic love story takes place on the De la Garza ranch, as the tyrannical owner, Mama Elena, chops onions at the kitchen table in her final days of pregnancy. This early encounter with food soon becomes a way of life, and Tita grows up to be a master chef. She shares special points of her favorite preparations with listeners throughout the story. Nobel Prize for Literature. Guatemalan diplomat and writer Miguel Angel Asturias began this award-winning work while still a law student. It is a story of ruthless dictator and his schemes to dispose of a political adversary in an unnamed Latin American country usually identified as Guatemala. The book has been acclaimed for portraying both a totalitarian government and its damaging psychological effects. In turns, it is shallow, profound, didactic, moving and instructive. In its original Slovenian, it was a bestseller, capturing both the ailments and strengths of a world that seems to have turned upside down our normal desires and expectations. Walking and writing, journey and journal, mirror one another to produce a calligraphic, magical work: A young man arrives at the church of a small African village and starts whistling so beautifully that the priest is left in tears. As his weeklong stay continues, the whistler finds himself affected by the colorful inhabitants of the village as they all become bewitched and surrender to the moods of his melodies. Piracy in the Gulf threatens global maritime trade routes while the Wahabbi strain of Islam is conquering followers town by town across the region. At the center of it all lies a priceless Indian sword, a gift from the British monarch to the Egyptian Pasha. But Erhama bin Jaber, a historical figure and one of the most notorious pirates in the Gulf, has his own agenda and his own vendettas. With The Patience Stone, Atiq Rahimi gives face and voice to one unforgettable woman—and, one could argue, offers her as a proxy for the grievances of millions—it is a rich read, part allegory, part a tale of retribution, part an exploration of honor, love, sex, marriage, war. It is without doubt an important and courageous book. He discovers that the only way forward is through bribery. Confronted with the stark irony of having to do something illegal to become legal he finds he must make a choice. This is a novel that explores the nature of class and identity in the post-colonial world through a narrative rich in imagery and wrought in a confident, graceful prose. For the young shepherd boy Dshurukuwaa, the confrontation comes in stages. His despairing questions to the Heavenly Blue Sky are answered only by the silence of the wind. The first and only member of the Tuvans to use written language to tell stories, Galsan Tschinag chronicles their traditions in this fascinating, bittersweet novel. Over the next four years, Balakian would bear witness to a seemingly endless caravan of blood, surviving to recount his miraculous escape and expose the atrocities that led to over a million deaths. An actress, performer, and artist as well as a writer, she only published one novel during her lifetime. She committed suicide in A young refugee wants to box her way straight off the boat to the top of the sport. Old friends talk all night after meeting up by chance. She imagines their future together Stories about people who have lost out in life and in love, and about their hopes for one really big win, the chance to make something of their lives. In silent apartments, desolate warehouses, prisons and down by the river, Meyer strikes the tone of our harsh times, and finds the grace notes, the bright lights shining in the dark. Kelin II "Daniel A. Kelin II preserves the qualities of oral storytelling in fifty stories recorded from eighteen storytellers on eight islands and atolls. This lively collection includes something for everyone: Profiles of the storytellers, a glossary, and a pronunciation guide enrich the collection. Locked in a closet every night, Hugo hears Mariana at work and disappears into dreams and visions about his family and friends. These students endeavour through various ways to adapt to new landscapes and environments. In this new place, they find themselves strangers, a minority in the midst of a sea of dimdimes who act strangely, whose values, practices etc. His stories are animated with Laotian virtues of simplicity, compassion, respect for age, and other village mores; they breathe with a gentleness that is fresh and distinctive. Outhine is interested in his own memories, in how to behave with compassion, and in the chain of life among men and women that reaches into the earth. In prose that is both raw and compelling, it tells the story of Beth Heke, a Maori woman struggling to keep her family from falling apart, despite the squalor and violence of the housing projects in which they live. Conveying both the rich textures of Maori tradition and the wounds left by its absence, Once Were Warriors is a masterpiece of unblinking realism, irresistible energy, and great sorrow. The Taos face exile with stoicism and teach their son to embrace reeducation wholeheartedly. Is this simple pragmatism, an attempt to protect the boy and ensure his future? Or do the banished cadres really cling to their belief in their leaders and the ideals of the Revolution? These questions remain tantalizingly unanswered in this prize-winning first novel. In the dying days of a brutal civil war in Bangladesh, Sohail Haque stumbles upon an abandoned building. Inside he finds a young woman whose story will haunt him for a lifetime to come. While Maya has stuck to her revolutionary ideals, Sohail has shunned his old life to become a charismatic religious leader. And when Sohail decides to send his son to a madrasa, the conflict between brother and sister comes to a devastating climax. The Good Muslim is an epic story about faith, family, the rise of religious fundamentalism, and the long shadow of war from prizewinning Bangladeshi novelist Tahmima Anam. Thus, Kava in the Blood is also an intriguing story of hurricanes, haunted houses and copious kava consumption, set within the dramatic landscapes and vibrant cultures of the Fiji Islands. The book is original, terrifying, complete. It invents its own history, eases in and out of nightmare as it mingles dream and fact. Kassandra and the Wolf is a short, muscular novel with an absolute sense of craft. The language throughout is merciless and crisp. Dempsey is out of the ring for seventeen seconds, but is allowed by the US referee to get back in. In the second round, Dempsey knocks Firpo out. Seconds Out is a powerful reflection on memory and national identity. Poetry and mystery go hand in hand in this transcendent novel about mankind, as never before imagined. Join Adam and Eve as they discover the world for themselves, feel their confusion and panic when they face punishment, and observe in awe as they experience the power to give life and, eventually, the ability to take it away to survive. From internationally acclaimed poet and author Gioconda Belli comes a beguiling and soulfully rewarding novel—a parable that captures our own time and our own uncertain future.

5: In Another Country and Other Short Novels by Robert Silverberg

Find helpful customer reviews and review ratings for In Another Country and Other Short Novels (Five Star First Edition Science Fiction and Fantasy Series) at www.enganchecubano.com Read honest and unbiased product reviews from our users.

Background information[ edit ] Baldwin started writing Another Country in Greenwich Village in and continued to write the novel in Paris and again New York. Despite his privately confessed reluctance to bring "Another Country, unfinished, into yet another country," Baldwin completed the book in Istanbul in 1958. Although the relationship is initially frivolous, it turns more serious as they continue to live together. Rufus becomes habitually physically abusive of Leona and she is eventually admitted to a mental hospital in the South. Rufus returns to Harlem in a deep depression and commits suicide by jumping off the George Washington Bridge. Afterwards they become closer. Ida starts having an affair with Ellis, an advertising executive who promises to help with her career as a singer. Throughout the novel, the effects of this internalized oppression are obvious: The concept of "another country" reflects not only the return of Eric to the United States from France, but also the feelings of alienation experienced by African Americans within the United States. According to Baldwin biographer W. Howells, whether it was the central relationship between white Vivaldo and black Ida or the accompanying bisexual affairs involving most of the other leading characters, all were intended by Baldwin to illustrate how difficult he felt real love was in contemporary American society. More importantly, Another Country suggests that we have not yet found a model for thinking outside the box that frames our discussions of interraciality and same-sex eroticism. It suggests, more importantly, that eliminating gender and racial difference will not solve the "problems" of difference either. The title of the novel suggests the wish for "another country," another nation, in which our racial and sexual selves are imagined and defined differently or perhaps where they are not defined at all. It is at once a question: Vivaldo is perhaps the most affected by this tendency. He also partially denies his own bisexuality. He fails to fully admit his attraction to Rufus. He does not see that his attraction to Ida potentially mirrors his attraction to Rufus. Also, despite mounting signs that Ida is involved in a career-advancing affair with the white TV producer Ellis, Vivaldo mostly denies this until the disillusioned Ida confesses to him herself in a cathartic scene near the end of the book. Only after a night with Eric does Vivaldo see the world more clearly and make tentative steps toward acceptance of his own bisexuality. Most of the white characters in the book downplay or refuse to admit the racial tension surrounding them. Cass and Richard are shocked when a group of black boys beat up their sons. Ida constantly suspects Vivaldo of exploiting her because she is black and has known white men who seek out sexual relations specifically with black women. Vivaldo refuses to admit any of this, although it is indicated that it may be true of their relationship. Professional jealousy[ edit ] Richard and Vivaldo are jealous of one another as writers. Consequently, after Cass and Eric initiate their affair, Richard suspects she is seeing Vivaldo. Reception[ edit ] Another Country received much attention and mixed reviews. Reviews in the black press were generally favorable. The New York Times called it "a sad story, brilliantly and fiercely told" and compared it to T. S. Eliot's Waste Land. Time magazine called it "a failure". Norman Mailer said it was "abominably written". It quickly became a bestseller. Yes, Rufus was a psychological freedom rider, turning the ultimate cheek, murmuring like a ghost "You took the best so why not take the rest," which has absolutely nothing to do with the way that Negroes have managed to survive here in the hells of North America! I am not an intellectual, not in the dreary sense that word is used today, and do not want to be: Brandon Gordon describes this critique in terms of the relationship between Vivaldo and Rufus, mediated by Leona.

6: In Another Country: Selected Stories - CommaPress

Title: In Another Country and Other Short Novels You are not logged in. If you create a free account and sign in, you will be able to customize what is displayed.

Books The true story behind the story that inspired 45 Years David Constantine, author of the short story that inspired must-see movie, 45 Years, tells Joe Shute how a startling real-life event sparked his original tale At home with David Constantine, author of In Another Country, the short story upon which 45 Years is based By Joe Shute 5: Acclaim has mounted not just for the powerful performances of its veteran stars - Tom Courtenay and Charlotte Rampling in perfectly understated form - but for its bleakly truthful treatment of themes that concern us all: Agatha A Nitecka Now David Constantine , 71, the poet, writer and former Oxford academic who penned In Another Country , the short story upon which the film is based, has told the Sunday Telegraph of startling real-life event that sparked his original tale. Holidaying in France some 15 years ago, Constantine heard of the discovery of a twenty-something mountaineer who had fallen down a glacial crevasse in Chamonix in the s. How can a love, weathered by day-to-day living, compete with one cut off in its prime? The shocking sight of his father - perfectly preserved in his prime, while he himself approached his eighties - tipped the son towards insanity. Party plans are going well, until, out of the blue, a letter arrives for Geoff Courtenay informing him that the body of his first love, Katya, has been found frozen in the icy glaciers of the Swiss Alps, half a century after she was lost. First published in in literary magazine, The Reader, and later in a collection of short stories, In Another Country first came to the attention of cult director Andrew Haigh a few years ago, who sent word he wanted to turn it into a film. And how can a love, weathered by day-to-day living, ever compete with one cut off in its prime? On set with the film? Agatha A Nitecka Though truth may underpin the story, Constantine says his obsession with what happens to love, as we age, is no reflection on his own marriage. Indeed next year he and his wife Helen, whom he met at Oxford University where they both studied modern languages, celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary. The pair until recently together edited the magazine, Modern Poetry in Translation and have two grown up children and six grandchildren. Although the film moves the action to Norfolk, the house in which the Mercers live is based closely on the one his parents used to share in Deganwy, a village near Conwy, North Wales, where they moved from Salford after his father secured a job as manager of a small employment exchange. Yet Constantine insists daily drudgery is not without its own charms: And within that life nothing is ever dead and buried. I shall always keep writing about those same themes until I can no longer pick up my pen. Although he has had no direct involvement with the film and is yet to meet the director, Constantine and his wife were invited to the press screening a few weeks ago. Helen and I were both profoundly moved by it. The gratifying thing is it is extraordinarily good. Into the little room came a rush of ghosts. She sat down opposite him and both felt cold. That Katya, she said. I see, said Mrs Mercer. After a while she said: I see you found your book. It was behind the pickles. You must have put it there. I suppose I must, she said. There were words in the letter, in the handwriting, he could not make out and words in the dictionary he could hardly find, in the old Gothic script; still, he had understood. Years since I read a word of German, he said. Funny how it starts coming back to you when you see it again. I daresay, said Mrs Mercer. The folded cloth lay between them on the polished table. Though he was the one with the information his face seemed to be asking her for help with it. You can see right in. Yes, said Mrs Mercer, when you come to think about it I suppose she would. Again, with his face and with a slight lifting of his mottled hands he seemed to be asking her to help him comprehend. Well, she said after a pause during which she drew the cloth towards her and folded it again and then again. She rose and made to leave the room but halted in the door and said: What are you going to do about it? What can I do? All day in a trance. Katya in the ice, the chaste snow drawn off her. He cut himself shaving, stared at his face, tried to fetch out the twenty-year-old from under his present skin. Trickle of blood, pink froth where it entered the soap. The little house oppressed him. There were not enough rooms to go from room to room in, nowhere to pace. He looked into the flagstone garden but the neighbours either side were out and looking over. It drove him only in his indoor clothes out and along the road a little way to where the road went down suddenly steeply and the estate of all the same houses was redeemed by a view of the estuary, the mountains and the open sea. He stood there thinking of Katya in the ice. Stood there so long the lady whose house he was outside standing there came out and asked: Are you all right, Mr Mercer? Fine, he said, and saw his own face mirrored in hers, ghastly. But it had begun. To order call or visit books.

7: 49 Incredible Books From 49 Different Countries | HuffPost

In Another Country and Other Short Novels by Robert Silverberg starting at $ In Another Country and Other Short Novels has 1 available editions to buy at Alibris.

May Summary The narrator of this story, a wounded American soldier, is recuperating from his injury in Milan, Italy. He receives treatments delivered by machines each afternoon at the hospital. His doctor seems overly optimistic. The officer was once a renowned fencer and is now angry and bitter. His invalid condition and the recent death of his young wife from pneumonia have sapped his will. He professes no faith in the machines treating his hand injury and does not believe in bravery. Injury fosters camaraderie and the narrator socializes with four other young men undergoing treatment at the hospital. The narrator admits his injury was not the result of heroic action but merely an accident. The medals he received were undeserved. Life may be a series of random events but some people have it worse than others. The only certainty in the lives of these characters is the fact that "the war was always there. Many of the characters grapple with a loss of function, a loss of purpose, and a loss of faith. Two characters lose the normal use of a limb--the narrator leg and the major hand. Almost all the characters in the story are portrayed as casualties of some sort. Detachment, disability, and fear of death are pervasive. For the soldiers, courage is not just facing enemy fire on the front line but also picking up the pieces of their damaged lives and facing the prospect of tomorrow. War, it seems, is forever. The title of the story is interesting. At first glance, "In Another Country," refers to the fact that the American narrator is indeed in a foreign land--Italy. Yet he is also a visitor to another realm--the "country" of the sick and injured. And maybe World War I is the ultimate other country--a setting that defines nations or destroys them and has the potential to erase people, ideology, and the future. Does the doctor featured in the story truly believe that his patients will recover from their injuries or is he merely accustomed to dispensing hope in much the same way he might dole out aspirin? The likelihood that the machines will heal the soldiers is debatable. Do these gadgets prefigure modern technology or are they another reminder of how dependent upon machines both war and medicine really are? Miscellaneous The story was first published in Ernest Hemingway participated in World War I. He was injured in Italy and received medals for courage.

8: In Another Country

In Another Country and Other Short Novels (Five Star Speculative Fiction) by Silverberg, Robert. Five Star ME. Used - Very Good. Former Library book. Great condition for a used book!

9: Formats and Editions of In another country, and other short novels [www.enganchecubano.com]

Short Stories of Ernest Hemingway Questions and Answers. The Question and Answer section for Short Stories of Ernest Hemingway is a great resource to ask questions, find answers, and discuss the novel.

Arrest the Silent Killer Political assessment of intellectuals before the cultural revolution Creatures of Prometheus The third and last part of the friendly admonition, to the Roman catholicks of Ireland Fakhr Al-Din Al-Razi and Thomas Aquinas on the Question of the Eternity of the World (Islamic Philosophy, Songs of the Carolina Charter colonists, 1663-1763. Early child development from measurement to action Sports Psychology For Runners Social research methods qualitative and quantitative approaches The McClung Family 86 Esl placement test A Canadian millionaire Murachs javascript end edition ä, è½½ Papers relating to the introduction of pure water. Managed Medicaid, Aids, and the Clinton health bill. A Long Obedience Journal The Character Of Jesus Portrayed Tolstoy On Shakespeare Rattlers snappers Facts and fancies of family history Standard Catalog of Sports Memorabilia The story of my life chapter wise summary Research methods in education an introduction william wiersma Tartine book no 3 Consistency Theorems 1870-1879: from the ruins Why? and other questions cancer makes you ask Address of His Excellency Alexander H. Bullock to the Honorable Council The papyri of Abraham Associate of science in mathematics at atlm Helping Children to Stay Healthy (From Birth to Three Series) P. Allen Smiths Living in the Garden Home I remember the day of my hanging Learning theories in education Pipe trades pocket manual Online jobs for everyone Introduction to genetic analysis 8th edition Geocentric approach in international business The music of the eye Books from any website