What are the information systems of today? The most important components of the information systems IS are computers. These can be laptops, cameras, smartphones etc. Information systems are used by many organizations to record purchases, to optimize the supply chain and many more. This can be achieved by using information systems. Through these systems new markets were more easily accessed. Because of the changes in technology new ways of working and socializing have developed over the last few years. People are no longer bound to a stationary PC but can now do their work wherever there is a phone signal. For socializing and communication people nowadays really need mobility and connectivity. In Peter Drucker argued that information technology IT would become more and more important. These workers have great career opportunities and are paid more than other workers. According to Drucker, the number of knowledge workers would increase over time and this would lead to a knowledge society. Many call this knowledge society the digital world. Some argue that there is a digital divide. What is the effect of globalization? Globalization is the integration of economies over the world. Globalization leads to several changes, namely: Economic changes Technological changes Cultural changes If an organization is moving its business processes or tasks to another company, either offshore or onshore domestically , then we speak of outsourcing. Tremendous decrease in communication costs, has increased the use of outsourcing. Read the instructions below in order to read the full content of this page.
