The First Lady of Gospel Theatre, Ms. Michelle, Playwright, Producer, Minister, Worship Dancer, and Now Author, pours out of her soul as she writes Is That Man Your Husband? The Book. This Woman of God openly and intimately shares her story, strategically exposing some of the pitfalls in her life that were the results of corrupt acts of hegemony.

You might be shocked and surprised, but this has happened to more women than you think. Your husband might not have realized how strong his feelings for other men were until after you were married. Or he might have been trying to quell these emotions by marrying into a straight relationship. It is also possible that he deeply cares for you and decided to marry you despite his big secret. Whatever the reason, if you are afraid your husband might be gay you will want to know for sure. And the best way to do that is with software such as Bust-a-Cheater. However, if more than a few of these signs are present, you should probably find out for sure before you make any blunt accusations. And that may mean you have to do something you are not comfortable with in the end. The last thing you want to do is sit around for years, only to find out your fears were true the entire time. You also have to be careful to look for indications that are clearly homosexual, because some of these warnings are also suggestions that your spouse is cheating heterosexually. Here are six indications that your husband may have homosexual inclinations. A normal, healthy relationship between a husband and wife should include things like kissing, cuddling, and holding hands. If your husband has recently been shunning the loving embraces and other signs of adoration, you might have a problem on your hands. He could be evading these things because he feels guilty about his secret. Another possibility is that he eludes them because they simply no longer hold any interest or attraction to him. Decline in sexual interest. This is a big one, as men are wired to think about sex on a daily basis. Your husband might claim that the two of you are having sex too often or that you have become aggressive and oversexed. Or he might seem distant and robotic in what are supposed to be your moments of greatest intimacy. He might argue that a decline in sexual activity is par for course in marriage, but usually this decrease will happen early on rather than later if something is wrong. Such behaviors are also signs that your husband may be cheating on you with another woman. However, there may be some more extreme cases that tell you otherwise. Or he may act as though he is not turned on anymore by, and have no interest in, your female parts. Along with a decrease in intimacy, there are other acts of avoidance that may indicate your husband is gay. He may also start promoting other behaviors that put a physical and emotional distance between the two of you, such as sleeping on the couch even though neither of you snores nor does gymnastics in your sleep. In some cases your husband may exhibit an extremely homophobic attitude. Of course some heterosexual men are just like this and there is no underlying reason. But, as odd as it seems, your husband could be doing this because he himself is secretly gay. He may not have yet accepted his gay nature, and so is lashing out in anger. Or he could be frustrated because he cannot express his true feelings like other homosexual men outside of marriage can. This may sound a bit obvious, but it is worth noting. Some men may accidentally come across a homosexual site or watch a porn video with a gay scene in it. But if you start noticing a bunch of pop-up ads for gay pornography or realize that your browsing history is full of gay porn sites, then there is probably something else going on. Your husband may insist that he does not know why there are gay pop-up ads, but in most cases these only appear because ad trackers in the web browser note that gay porn sites have been visited. Also, if you notice that the browsing history on your computer gets deleted quite frequently then your husband is definitely hiding something. Excessive amount of time with men. There is a point where bro time ends and the amount of time your husband is spending with other men becomes questionable. There is absolutely nothing wrong with your husband having guy friends and spending time with them. What becomes worrisome is when your husband is flaky and suspicious about it. If he is spending a lot of time with men who you do not know or who he will not identify, there may be a problem. There may also be an issue if he is trying to hide how much he texts and talks on the phone with other guys. He should not be showing more intimacy and interest to other men than he is to you. There is also nothing wrong with your husband having a gay best friend. Once again you just have to monitor how much alone time he spends with this person and whether or not he acts suspicious about what he has been doing. You can probably let this slide the first time, but if it becomes a habit you may find out your husband is having a little bit too much fun there. These red flags are some of the most obvious ones that secretly gay husbands display. There are others, but these are the most common. They may mean something, they may not. You have to decide for yourself based on what you have noticed. Of course some men might not demonstrate any of these warnings signs and it will be years before you find out the truth. Women should follow their instincts when it comes to discerning whether or not their husband is homosexual. If they think something is up, it probably is. It can be a hard thing to learn that the man you have pledged your life to is actually gay, especially if the two of you have had kids together. Some couples work through it with kindness and compassion, others break things off in rage. There is a good chance that even if your gay husband does not love you sexually, he still loves you as a close friend, and hopefully there will be no bad blood when things get settled.

A University of Chicago study showed that the number of women whose husbands had been with other men is estimated at between 1. Other studies have shown that, out of the 27 million American males who are presently married, , 1. You might be asking, why would a gay man marry a woman? There are a number of reasons. For example, in the Bible Belt and know many people who are taught that "being gay" is a sin against nature. Still others may marry a woman because they want children. Whatever the reason, finding out your husband is gay can be really heartbreaking. Many men go through the identity crisis of acknowledging their sexual persuasion while in the marriage. In dealing with this topic we will carefully avoid the stereotypes and judgements about gay men being effeminate, etc. Also, some of these things might not mean much unless they occur together and not by themselves. That being said, here are some gay husband signs to look for. The same principle comes into play here. Think about it; would you suspect a person to participate in behavior they constantly say they hate? A few high-profile cases Christian pastor Ted Haggard and senator Larry Craig come to mind have shown this to be very true. Being secretive about relationships with other men. If your husband got several phone calls or invitations from another woman and hid that from you, would you be suspicious? But what about the same things from other men? A loss of sexual interest in you. Or a general pulling away from the sexual side of a relationship over the years. Are you always the one to initiate sexual activity? Does he seem particularly turned off by aspects of the female anatomy? Some couples might decide to stay together for the good of the kids. While this is a very personal decision only you can make, you should know that this might not be as good for the kids as you think. While it might seem obvious that kids fare better with both parents in the same home, children are often a lot more perceptive than we give them credit for. This is especially true if you or your husband started dating or openly seeing a new male partner while still in the marriage. Divorce is usually a messy process, but sometimes the implications are different if the marriage ends because one spouse is gay. Sometimes adultery on the part of one or both spouses is brought up in discussions about alimony and child custody. This can make a difference in terms of grounds for divorce or amounts of alimony. The differing definitions of adultery causes statistics regarding divorcing gay husbands to be thrown off-base. Whatever the laws or statistics, you should know that these questions might come up in the divorce process. Even then, you might not get a straight answer. The hope is that you never have to consider any of these gay husband signs and will have a happy marriage. However, sometimes discovering the painful truth is necessary to your happiness in the future. No Fault Sexual Identity Crisis Most importantly a woman going through a life transformation with the man she has loved, needs to ignore the need to press blame. A sexual preference and pre condition is not something he chose but part of who he is.

It lays bare the secrets of all those years over which she thought the veil of the past had for ever been drawn. But His words pierce to the inmost thoughts, and prove Him to know all the acts of her life John 4: The holy name may not be given to the paramour thou now hast; with the loss of purity is linked the loss of truthfulness; the very truth thou utterest is meant to convey to Me an untruth, but to One who knows all, the words are really true;--"in that saidst thou truly. We should not go into places of temptation but when we needs must; and then must not dwell in them, but hasten through them. We have here our Lord Jesus under the common fatigue of travellers. Thus we see that he was truly a man. Toil came in with sin; therefore Christ, having made himself a curse for us, submitted to it. Also, he was a poor man, and went all his journeys on foot. Being wearied, he sat thus on the well; he had no couch to rest upon. He sat thus, as people wearied with travelling sit. Surely, we ought readily to submit to be like the Son of God in such things as these. Christ asked a woman for water. She was surprised because he did not show the anger of his own nation against the Samaritans. Moderate men of all sides are men wondered at. Christ took the occasion to teach her Divine things: By this living water is meant the Spirit. Under this comparison the blessing of the Messiah had been promised in the Old Testament. The graces of the Spirit, and his comforts, satisfy the thirsting soul, that knows its own nature and necessity. What Jesus spake figuratively, she took literally. Of whatever waters of comfort we drink, we shall thirst again. But whoever partakes of the Spirit of grace, and the comforts of the gospel, shall never want that which will abundantly satisfy his soul. Carnal hearts look no higher than carnal ends. Give it me, saith she, not that I may have everlasting life, which Christ proposed, but that I come not hither to draw. The carnal mind is very ingenious in shifting off convictions, and keeping them from fastening. But how closely our Lord Jesus brings home the conviction to her conscience! He severely reproveth her present state of life. The woman acknowledged Christ to be a prophet. The power of his word in searching the heart, and convincing the conscience of secret things, is a proof of Divine authority. It should cool our contests, to think that the things we are striving about are passing away. The object of worship will continue still the same, God, as a Father; but an end shall be put to all differences about the place of worship. Reason teaches us to consult decency and convenience in the places of our worship; but religion gives no preference to one place above another, in respect of holiness and approval with God. The Jews were certainly in the right. Those who by the Scriptures have obtained some knowledge of God, know whom they worship. The word of salvation was of the Jews. It came to other nations through them. Christ justly preferred the Jewish worship before the Samaritan, yet here he speaks of the former as soon to be done away. God was about to be revealed as the Father of all believers in every nation. The spirit or the soul of man, as influenced by the Holy Spirit, must worship God, and have communion with him. Spiritual affections, as shown in fervent prayers, supplications, and thanksgivings, form the worship of an upright heart, in which God delights and is glorified. The woman was disposed to leave the matter undecided, till the coming of the Messiah. But Christ told her, I that speak to thee, am He. She was an alien and a hostile Samaritan, merely speaking to her was thought to disgrace our Lord Jesus. Yet to this woman did our Lord reveal himself more fully than as yet he had done to any of his disciples. No past sins can bar our acceptance with him, if we humble ourselves before him, believing in him as the Christ, the Saviour of the world.
