The rising tension coming from North Korea has long surpassed the occasional threats we already got used to that pop up in various areas of the world. This time, although it is one country and not one of the biggest in the world, we cannot ignore the fact that the old rules we remember from international conflicts do not seem to apply to the present tension, and despite everything " history tends to repeat itself. However, the outbreak of this war had other partners as well. The central role of the appeasing British leader, Neville Chamberlain, who naively refused to acknowledge the German threat to world peace, and made concessions to ward off the imminent evil " facilitated the war that devastated Europe, which could not cope with the wave of evil that engulfed it. Both Neville Chamberlain and Vyacheslav Molotov, the Soviet Foreign Minister, were perceived at first as working to lift the threat of war, by reaching out in friendship to the rising Nazi regime. The harsh reality proved otherwise to the supporters of appeasement and placation. North Korea has not concealed its intention to become a major player in global politics. Its view was that it would gain its status of right and not on sufferance, which would be maintained only if it had the force and strength to be a threat to other countries. In the early s, in a meeting with senior Israeli officials, Fidel Castro spoke about the future of world peace. Castro argued that the collapse of communism and half the socialist world after the cold war had challenged the countries that were affiliated with this ideology, and had lost the protection of the Soviet Union. He praised the coalition of ostracized countries, which were obligated to helping each other, relying on the hidden power of those who opposed the new world leadership. Indeed, these countries promoted a network that eventually threatened the entire world. Nevertheless, President Bill Clinton refused to listen to the threats emanating from North Korea and to expert opinions about it and its allies. These concessions were accompanied by generous grants of funds and commerce, in exchange for promises to stop developing nuclear weapons. Through a line of political conciliatoriness, and at the high cost of economic aid " the ongoing dangerous armament process of North Korea was enabled on the one hand, and on the other allowed its allies to rely on the technology developed as tiebreaking tools in building their own threats in other regions. And so, in June , North Korea conducted an ostentatious missile test, and in October of that year " a nuclear test, without attempting to conceal or deny, but rather bragging about its success. Even after the agreement was signed between Iran and the West, Iran continued in the same way in pursuing the development of weapons, especially missiles, without its pre-nuclear capacity being damaged. There is no doubt that the millions of dollars of grants that former President Barack Obama gave Teheran created an opportunity to promote the research in North Korea " a poor, resources-deprived country, in desperate need for cash flow, received from Iran with the help of the US. Ever since, neither Iran nor North Korea have desisted from developing various-range missiles adapted to carrying various types of warheads, which can indisputably be seen as a clear and direct threat to all of Southeast Asia and perhaps even the US. Iran, which has invested a lot of money in South American countries such as Bolivia, Venezuela and Nicaragua , and of course in Syria, Sudan and Lebanon through Hezbollah " has opened the gates of these countries to the influence of North Korea and other terror-supporting countries " and has allowed these technologies to flow to terror organizations together with weapons components that it supplied. Slowly, the reduced Axis of Evil became smaller, on one hand, but more dangerous and brazen, on the other hand, and no real efforts are made to stop the dangerous developments in the two leading countries " Iran and North Korea. The development of nuclear weapons and missiles that can carry them to medium and long distances has created a new world reality. So far, the balance of terror has been a deterrent, and has prevented the potential of mutual assured destruction. The fact that irresponsible and uncontrollable regimes are equipping themselves with threatening and tiebreaking strategic weapons “ has eliminated the balance factor from the equation; all that remains is terror, which is used for political blackmail, and puts the world in catastrophic danger. Once again, it is obvious that indeterminism means lack of leadership, and as in any system in which leadership and governability are irresponsible “ the results could be devastating and change the entire world. The Second World War broke out because of indecision, appeasement and cowardice, which eventually led to the greatest, most devastating human disaster we have known so far. The margins of the Third World War are beginning to show, and are threatening the daily reality in all our countries. The willingness to contain terror and to look the other way from these phenomena and their perpetrators, the willingness to ignore terror-supporting countries and to allow them to continue to manipulate world politics “ have a volatile potential for our lifestyle in most developed countries of the world. The policy of denial that allows us to bury our heads in the sand in belief that the harsh facts will disappear on their own “ is similar to a person who refuses to read the worrying symptoms of a disease, denying that avoidance of preventive treatment could be fatal. Pyongyang, Teheran, and other associated governments in Qatar and Ankara that impact global atmosphere, together with coalitions of extremists that are being formed, are bringing world politics closer to a volatile crisis, which could at any moment devastatingly affect the present and future of all humanity. Despite the abundant information available in this era “ most decision makers throughout the world seem frozen in fear, avoiding making brave decisions “ and their indecision is leading events towards a dangerous and all-engulfing global crescendo.

Massalijn As Israel commits genocide in Gaza, Palestine opens up wounds of colonial trauma connecting Third World people in their struggles with racial injustice, colonial occupation and imperial domination across borders. In song and protest, Third World solidarity with Palestine is imagining a de-colonial liberation that makes other worlds possible. As bombs drop on Gaza yet again, people across the world are turning to the streets in the tens of thousands to express solidarity with the Palestinians. Palestine is uniting oppressed communities beyond colonial borders and awakening an urgent need for militancy in interconnected struggles against racial injustice, colonial subjugation and imperial domination. To be in solidarity with Palestine today is to be in revolt against centuries of western global dominance; it is to enact a politics of de-colonial liberation that makes other worlds possible. In outright defying the ban, immigrant youth raised a middle finger to the French state; their collective disobedience revealing that France, in its crimes at home and abroad, holds zero legitimacy in their eyes. The resurgence of the oppressed through the active reclaiming of the streets and proud assertion of themselves should therefore be understood as a powerful retaliation against the economic, political and cultural wars France wages on its disenfranchised minorities. Similar dynamics also play out in the Netherlands, where recent Palestinian solidarity marches brought thousands of Dutch Moroccan and Turkish citizens to the streets. Protest in the Hague, Netherlands. Massalijn In their protests, speeches, chants and banners, Dutch immigrant youth refused to swallow the depoliticized and whitewashed version of the televised events in Gaza, taking it upon themselves to ignite the necessary fire of indignation that the injustice perpetrated in Palestine ought to cause. This also implied an engagement in critiques of both domestic and international authorities, institutions and discourses of power. In his speech, for instance, Dutch Moroccan rapper Appa pushed the public to interrogate and question the hypocrisy of the current global order and the liberal principles of justice that have been accepted as normal: Where are those politicians that talk plenty about equality and freedom? Where is the so-called honest and objective media? Where are our Arab leaders? Where is that American puppet Sisi that keeps Egypt in stranglehold? Where are all those oil sheikhs that sold their souls to the West? Where are the rest of the hypocrites that shout that they believe in freedom and equality while they are in bed with the Zionist terror state of Israel? This could be noticed not only in critiques like that of Appa, but also in how Dutch immigrants took over the city streets. In the thousands, Dutch Arabs and Muslims repainted an otherwise white, orderly and peaceful urban landscape into a loud messy brown jubilation of people power that blocked off the hyper-consumerist city center. Massalijn That day, Palestinian flags were waved, not Dutch ones. That day, the Netherlands was not celebrated, but shamed. That day, Dutch immigrants did not keep their heads down; they raised fists and celebrated presence, public ownership and collective identity in their connection with Palestine. Unlike white people, people who share a Third World identity do not need references to international laws, statistics or UN resolutions to be able to distinguish oppressor from oppressed. Nor do they do need white men like Chomsky, Ben White, Finkelstein or Jimmy Carter to convince them of the grave injustices perpetrated by Israel and its Western allies. So when Palestinians are being butchered in Gaza, this injustice opens up wounds of colonial trauma and incites an indignation that unites oppressed Third World people globally in their struggles against western domination. Israel Is a Third-world Country in Denial. There are people who want us to be scared by the Iranian bomb rather than by the home-grown social-welfare bomb; there are people who gladly devote themselves to this act of whitewashing and denial.

Israel not a third world country Op-ed: In one area he hit the target: The forces of nature, which often go wild in other countries, turn into poodles when they visit us. Sometimes a heat wave, sometimes hail, sometimes frost in the valleys. Not a big deal. The result was cold, wet and painful. Hundreds of thousands suffered from power outages, some for days. Immediately, like a conditioned reflex, radio and television channels were conquered by the magic word: It was immediately followed by its young, vibrant sibling: The state commission of inquiry. The finger was pointed at the Israel Electric Corporation, the police, the Home Front Command, the welfare system, mayors. I doubt if they know much about what happens in real life, in the first world and in the third world. I covered the two natural disasters which hit the United States in the past decade – Hurricane Katrina in and Superstorm Sandy in. Nearly 1, people died in Katrina; Sandy had several dozen fatalities. Katrina was mainly a man-made disaster. The Corps of Engineers failed to properly reinforce the dams that should have prevented the flooding of New Orleans, and the Bush administration did not rush to help the victims. In Sandy the authorities offered a quick response, but it was not enough to prevent the damage. Tens of thousands along the East Coast were cut off from power supply. Many had to wait weeks before being reconnected. In some places the damage has not been repaired till this very day. But why talk about superstorms? Cities located close to the Arctic Circle, in Canada, in the north of the US or in northern Europe, function very well even when they are covered with heavy snow. Other respectable cities like London, like Washington, become paralyzed when hit by a storm of the kind that hit us this weekend. The airports shut down. The power supply is cut off, as is the Internet, and no one cries out "failure. No, Israel is not a third world country. An inquiry is what the state comptroller is meant to do as part of his job. The problem is not in the inquiry, but in how fast this was made public. The comptroller appears to be trying to ride a populist wave of one day, to steal a headline. Are electric wires underground better than electric wires above the ground? Will pruning trees before winter all over Israel reduce the chance of power outages? Will every city more than meters 1, feet high be required to purchase snowplows at a quantity capable of dealing with 1 meter 3. Fine, but who will pay for it? Will every city, upon every weather warning, set up combined emergency headquarters with the Home Front Command, the municipality, the police, the Social Services Ministry, Magen David Adom and the firefighting services? Great, but what will happen after the weather forecast is not verified twice? Will private companies replace the Electric Corp? Awesome, but only a gullible person will believe that a private company will prepare for snow free of charge. For these the establishment must prepare, and prepare seriously. The positive side of an event of this kind is the opportunity it gives people to help others. Israelis reveal their best qualities in times of need: They are involved, resourceful, multi-active. I doubt such a decision would have been possible in a coalition built on the haredi parties. In dealing with Mother Nature there are no zero faults. Follow Ynetnews on Facebook and Twitter.

First world, Second world, and Third world countries refer to geopolitical allegiances, not level of development. In this sense it is a first world country. If you are asking if it developing, industrialized, or post-industrial, it lies somewhere between industrialized and post-industrialized.

The opinions, facts and any media content in them are presented solely by the authors, and neither The Times of Israel nor its partners assume any responsibility for them. Please contact us in case of abuse. In case of abuse, Report this post. The third world war has not yet been declared, but actually, unwillingly, we have been pushed into another world war. What is the definition of a world war? A war which involves numerous countries from all around the world, which is a catalyst to change the existing global order, political borders, and the demographic makeup of various areas. World war results in high numbers of casualties and refugees, and changes the structure of societies. People no longer feel safe in their homeland and do not accept the legitimacy of their rulers. The current war did not only change borders but also gave legitimacy to massacre significant populations, including the Yazidis, the Kurds, and Christians in the Middle East. The use of unconventional weapons is part of this war, which is different from all previous wars. Before the First World War, wars never had more than a few hundred thousand casualties. The First World War exposed the horrid face of war, as 20 million were killed. The depth of this tragic situation brought about a need to establish laws of warfare, which would protect POWs, civilians, and refugees. Unfortunately, these laws of war could not prevent the Second World War from occurring. The results of the Second World War were even more devastating than the previous war. Not only were there more casualties, but there were even more grievous war crimes, genocide, and crimes against humanity, some of which were performed by the states who had written the laws of war. Following the Second World War, new conventions were drafted for the laws of war, and new borders were drawn. However, none of this could prevent a deterioration of the situation into a Cold War between East and West. The world did not reach the goal of peace. The fall of the Soviet Union brought about a new promise to the world – the hope for a spread of democracy and world peace. However, these hopes were dashed by a difficult reality. The world became more divided and more dangerous. Indeed, the laws of warfare which were written following the two world wars could not succeed in bringing about world peace. International law could not deal with the evil we are witness to today. Today, various rulers threaten one another and attempt to gain and utilize weapons of mass destruction. Millions of refugees wander the world, who have little hope for a better reality. This is the character of the Third World War. There is no strategy for dealing with a war based on religious fundamentalism, racism, tribalism, and bigotry. There is a need for a new ethical codex to deal with the new war. The soldiers of the new war are different than in the past. For example, in the past, the global powers knew how to deal with the issue of sea piracy. However, in our period, this phenomena has returned. The world has yet to find a response to piracy, or other types of terrorism. The world is looking for a solutions for issues that are less controversial; however, it has no strategy to deal with this new type of war. There is an urgent need to to establish new international laws of warfare, relevant to the new type of war. There must be an attempt to define and understand terrorism, refugees, and the global responsibility prevent the refugee crisis, which also poses a threat to host communities. The laws must define the difference between soldiers and terrorist. There is a need to define a population that supports terrorism, and to set rules for war between an army and a terrorist organization. The new type of war has created great fear around the world, which has resulted in an inability to act. However, just as with any epidemic, ignoring this illness will not make it go away.

Portion of the Temple Scroll , one of the Dead Sea Scrolls , written during the Second Temple period With successive Persian rule , the autonomous province Yehud Medinata was gradually developing back into urban society, largely dominated by Judeans. The Greek conquests largely skipped the region without any resistance or interest. Incorporated into the Ptolemaic and finally the Seleucid empires, the southern Levant was heavily hellenized , building the tensions between Judeans and Greeks. The conflict erupted in BCE with the Maccabean Revolt , which succeeded in establishing an independent Hasmonean Kingdom in Judah, which later expanded over much of modern Israel, as the Seleucids gradually lost control in the region. The struggle between pro-Roman and pro- Parthian factions in Judea eventually led to the installation of Herod the Great and consolidation of the Herodian kingdom as a vassal Judean state of Rome. With the decline of the Herodian dynasty , Judea, transformed into a Roman province , became the site of a violent struggle of Jews against Greco-Romans, culminating in the Jewish-Roman wars , ending in wide-scale destruction, expulsions, and genocide. Jewish presence in the region significantly dwindled after the failure of the Bar Kokhba revolt against the Roman Empire in CE. Christianity was gradually evolving over Roman Paganism , when the area stood under Byzantine rule. Through the 5th and 6th centuries, the dramatic events of the repeated Samaritan revolts reshaped the land, with massive destruction to Byzantine Christian and Samaritan societies and a resulting decrease of the population. After the Persian conquest and the installation of a short-lived Jewish Commonwealth in CE, the Byzantine Empire reconquered the country in Middle Ages and modern history Further information: Control of the region transferred between the Rashidun Caliphs , Umayyads , Abbasids , Fatimids , Seljuks , Crusaders , and Ayyubids throughout the next three centuries. When the city fell, around 60, people were massacred, including 6, Jews seeking refuge in a synagogue. In , Sultan Saladin , founder of the Ayyubid dynasty , defeated the Crusaders in the Battle of Hattin and subsequently captured Jerusalem and almost all of Palestine. In time, Saladin issued a proclamation inviting Jews to return and settle in Jerusalem, [] and according to Judah al-Harizi , they did: He wrote "If the gentiles wish to make peace, we shall make peace and leave them on clear terms; but as for the land, we shall not leave it in their hands, nor in the hands of any nation, not in any generation. Jerusalem, although left without the protection of any city walls since , also saw a flurry of new construction projects centred around the Al-Aqsa Mosque compound on the Temple Mount. In , the Mamluk Sultan Baybars converted the Cave of the Patriarchs in Hebron into an exclusive Islamic sanctuary and banned Christians and Jews from entering, who previously had been able to enter it for a fee. The ban remained in place until Israel took control of the building in Meir Latif arrived from Italy and counted Jewish families in Jerusalem. With the help of the Sephardic immigration from Spain, the Jewish population had increased to 10, by the early 16th century. In , the territory was divided between Britain and France under the mandate system , and the British-administered area which included modern day Israel was named Mandatory Palestine. Balfour Declaration and Intercommunal conflict in Mandatory Palestine Theodor Herzl , visionary of the Jewish state Since the existence of the earliest Jewish diaspora , many Jews have aspired to return to "Zion" and the "Land of Israel", [] though the amount of effort that should be spent towards such an aim was a matter of dispute. The Maccabaeans will rise again. Let me repeat once more my opening words: The Jews wish to have a State, and they shall have one. We shall live at last as free men on our own soil, and die peacefully in our own home. The world will be freed by our liberty, enriched by our wealth, magnified by our greatness. And whatever we attempt there to accomplish for our own welfare will react with beneficent force for the good of humanity.

Austria , Finland , Ireland , Sweden , Switzerland and Yugoslavia Shifting in definitions[edit] Since the end of the Cold War, the original definition of the term First World is no longer necessarily applicable. There are varying definitions of the First World, however, they follow the same idea. Daniels, past president of the Academy of International Business, defines the First World to be consisting of "high-income industrial countries". Bryjak defines the First World to be the "modern, industrial, capitalist countries of North America and Europe". Robert Kohls, former director of training for the U. In , the United Nations used the terms first, second, third, and fourth worlds to define the relative wealth of nations although popular use of the term fourth world did not come about until later. The World Bank separates countries into four categories: The First World is considered to be countries with high-income economies. The high-income economies are equated to mean developed and industrialized countries. The model did not emerge to its end state all at once. They created two camps, known as blocs. These blocs formed the basis of the concepts of the First and Second Worlds. They were also referred to as the Western Bloc and the Eastern Bloc. The circumstances of these two blocs were so different that they were essentially two worlds, however, they were not numbered first and second. Just as the third estate comprised everybody else, Sauvy called the Third World all the countries that were not in this Cold War division, i. Here the three-world system emerged. In his book The Fourth World: An Indian Reality, he describes the emergence of the Fourth World while coining the term. The fourth world refers to "nations", e. The First World and Second World were at constant odds with one another via the tensions between their two cores, the United States and the Soviet Union, respectively. The Cold War, by virtue of its name, was a primarily ideological struggle between the First and Second Worlds, or more specifically, the U. S and the Molotov Plan from the Soviet Union. To stop citizens in East Berlin from having too much exposure to the capitalist West, the Soviet Union put up the Berlin Wall within the actual city. Because countries of the Third World were noncommittal and non-aligned with both the First World and the Second World, they were targets for recruitment. In addition, because the Soviet Union core of the Second World also wanted to expand, the Third World often became a site for conflict. Success lay with the First World if at the end of the war, the country became capitalistic and democratic, and with the Second World, if the country became communist. While Vietnam as a whole was eventually communized, only the northern half of Korea remained communist. Deaths from water-related illnesses have largely been eliminated in "wealthier nations", while they are still a "major concern in the developing world". These include non-Latin domains such as Chinese, Arabic, and Russian. This is one way that the flow of information between the First and Third Worlds may become more even. They have also created immigration and governmental burden problems for the countries i. International relations[edit] Until the recent past, little attention was paid to the interests of Third World countries. For thousands of years, peopleâ€™and, later, corporationsâ€™have been buying from and selling to each other in lands at great distances, such as through the famed Silk Road across Central Asia that connected China and Europe during the Middle Ages. Likewise, for centuries, people and corporations have invested in enterprises in other countries. In fact, many of the features of the current wave of globalization are similar to those prevailing before the outbreak of the First World War in All of the European Union countries are joined together by a hope to promote and extend peace, democracy, cooperativeness, stability, prosperity, and the rule of law. From the beginning of its inception, countries in the EU were judged by many standards, including economic ones. This is where the relation between globalization, the EU, and First World countries arises. Thus, enlargement was no longer a question of if, but when and how. The European Council stated that accession could occur when the prospective country is able to assume the obligations of membership, that is that all the economic and political conditions required are attained. Furthermore, it defined the membership criteria, which are regarded as the Copenhagen criteria, as follows: Therefore, there is a direct link between globalization, developed nations, and the European Union.

After the collapse of the Soviet Union, multinational corporations proliferated as more countries focused on global trade. As corporations become larger and multinational, their influence and interests go further accordingly. Being able to influence and own most media companies, it is hard to be able to publicly debate the notions and ideals that corporations pursue. Some choices that corporations take to make profits can affect people all over the world. To participate in this new global economy, developing countries must be seen as attractive offshore production bases for multinational corporations. To be such bases, developing countries must provide relatively well-educated workforces, good infrastructure electricity, telecommunications, transportation , political stability, and a willingness to play by market rules. By themselves, developing countries, even if well-educated, cannot produce at the quality levels demanded in high-value-added industries and cannot market what they produce even in low-value-added industries such as textiles or shoes. Put bluntly, multinational companies possess a variety of factors that developing countries must have if they are to participate in the global economy. Outsourcing is among some of the many reasons for increased competition within developing countries.

Two dozen short essays, many by Israeli practitioners, on Israel's political strategy and aid programs in Asia, Latin America, and particularly Africa. Those describing the accomplishments of the earlier years are better than those which attempt to explain Third World attitudes and record the.

It has its roots in the historic claim to the land which lies between the eastern shores of the Mediterranean Sea and the Jordan river. Israel has been a dry tinderbox in world affairs since when she became a nation once again. All these terror strikes, resulting in much innocent blood being spilt, has prompted various Israeli responses that have accomplished little except to stir up further hatred within the hearts of all Palestinian people. All this terror, bloodshed, and military retaliation, has turned the entire region into a literal tinderbox, awaiting just the right spark to set the Middle East ablaze. The Muslim world intends for the Israeli-Palestinian conflict to be set ablaze as part of their overall effort to defeat both Israel and her major ally -- the United States. This plan was boldly enunciated by Iranian leaders in March As Coalition Forces were fighting furiously in the southern portion of Iraq, key Arab leaders in the region announced plans to use Iraq as a "swamp" in which to tie down superior American forces and then light "many fires" in the entire Middle East region, including Israel. Why is this story worthy of an Act all of its own? Bush spent so much time, energy, and diplomatic power behind trying to set up a state within a state that no one wants? In forcefully heralding a Palestinian State, both Israel and the United States can tell the rest of the world that, if the Palestinians had just wanted peace, - and had stopped the terror attacks - they could have achieved it through the newly created Palestinian State. The US and Israel will be able to state that continued Palestinian terrorism just pushed Israel too far, and "they had it coming". This will be the excuse when Israel attacks and completely destroys Palestine. March - June, -- After waves of suicide attacks early in the year, Israel re-occupied almost all of the West Bank in March, and again in June. For most of , Palestinian cities were regularly raided, remained cut off from each other, surrounded and under curfew for long periods of time. April -- Israeli forces entered and captured the refugee camp in northern West Bank city of Jenin. The Palestinians claimed massacre. The Israeli army, which took heavy casualties, said it met heavy organized resistance, and insisted that 52 Palestinians were killed. A large group of Palestinians had taken refuge in the church when Israeli troops moved into the town. May 25, -- Most Israelis are aghast at the sudden turn of events: To think that a Prime Minister of Israel would agree to a Palestinian State against the will of the majority of the Jewish people, not only in Israel but also around the world It is no secret that George W. Bush along with the rest of the quartet has pressured Sharon. The question in the minds of most Israelis is what is it Bush has on Sharon that could force him to turn against his own people. For there is no doubt that he will go down in Jewish and World history as the Jew who sold out his own people and gave Israel to the enemies of God. After years resisting Palestinian Independence, Israel makes a miraculous about turn and agrees to a Palestinian State. June 6, -- In sheer disgust, the Palestinian militant group, Hamas, says it is breaking off talks with Palestinian Prime Minister Abu Mazen in protest at his promise to end violence against Israelis June 10, -- IDF helicopters fire five missiles at the car of Hamas leader, Abdel Aziz Rantisi, who survives, but three others are killed. Hamas and other Palestinian leaders vow such revenge as to cause an "earthquake"! June 11, -- A Palestinian disguised as an Orthodox Jew blows up a crowded civilian bus in Central Jerusalem, killing 17 and wounding scores. June 13, -- Headlines throughout the region scream that both Israel and Hamas have declared all-out war on each other, during a week in which almost 50 people were killed in various terrorist attacks. November 16, -- The treasonous Geneva Accord, drafted in London, not Switzerland as is widely believed, is mailed to every Israeli household. They present the proposal to terror agents representing bin Laden, work out the kinks and arrive at an agreement aimed at ending the conflict between al Qaida and the United States. What would the overwhelming majority of Americans say? In unison the outcry would be "Treason!" April 17, -- Abdel Aziz al-Rantissi, head of the Hamas militant group in Gaza, is killed in a targeted Israeli attack. Revenge is coming," another Hamas leader, Ismail Haniya, told reporters. It is our fate in Hamas and it is our fate as Palestinians to die as martyrs. A true turn-around of unbelievable proportions. The only way in which Israel can carry out her planned unilateral withdrawal as first envisioned by the Oslo Accord is if both major parties came together to form a government which could not be shaken by the inevitable explosion of resistance from settlers and patriots who are completely, irrevocably opposed to the idea of giving up land to the Palestinian enemy. For twenty two straight days, between December 27th, and January 18th of , the Israeli military bombed large areas of the Gaza killing 1, civilians including children , while 5, civilians were wounded. Over 20, Palestinians were made homeless 3, homes destroyed. The Gaza infrastructure and economy was further ruined. Hundreds of civilians were killed in attacks carried out using high-precision weapons such as bombs and missiles launched from F fighter jets and unmanned drones. Tanks and ground troops shot civilians at short range who posed absolutely no threat to the Israelis. Indiscriminate weapons such as mortars and artillery were used on densely populated residential areas. White phosphorous was used on residential areas, schools and hospitals. Medical vehicles and personnel were purposely attacked to hinder their work. Utilities and vital infrastructure were purposely targeted. Twelve total miles of water piping was destroyed, along with four water reservoirs and 11 wells. The sewage system and pumping stations were destroyed. Palestinian police stations were purposely targeted. One of the most infamous incidents of the widespread slaughter occurred on January 4th, when the Israeli army herded nearly members of the Samouni family into a single building in the Zaytoun area of Gaza City. Once there, they were purposely shelled, killing 21 members of the family outright and wounding the remainder. UN Mission workers documented several incidents where Israeli soldiers shot and killed civilians waving make-shift white flags to indicate their willingness to surrender. Two Palestinian women, Majda 37 years old and Rayya Hajjaj 65 years old were thusly murdered by an Israeli soldier who was prosecuted and sentenced to 45 days in jail; he was the only soldier to face serious charges stemming from Operation Cast Lead. The armed wing of Hamas and other armed Palestinian fighters did launch hundreds of rockets and mortars at civilian areas of Southern Israel during the 22 day conflict killing three civilians and six Israeli soldiers. Several dozen civilians were injured. And when we have the so-called "Grapes of Wrath" Israeli artillery slaughter of innocent Lebanese civilians in a United Nations refugee compound near Qana in Southern Lebanon on April 18th, Of the people who took refuge in the compound, were killed and wounded including 4 Fijian UN workers. Every subsequent investigation other than the investigation conducted by the Israelis determined that the shelling was intentional. Supposedly the attack by Israel on the UN compound was a response to a Hezbollah rocket attack upon an Israeli patrol. The Israeli patrol was planting anti- personnel mines and explosives in UN territory. As of March , one hundred sixty one countries have signed the Ottawa Treaty banning the use of land mines, but 36 countries have not. The countries that refuse to sign the treaty include Israel, U.
