September 5, As we push towards reconciliation, we have to expose the wounds of the past that always pop-up to hinder the journey. Real reconciliation should not be considered for the sake of political expedience alone. The festering wounds need to be recognized and healed to reach a meaningful and lasting peace. Reconciliation requires a holistic approach. He was on his way home when he saw the bodies dangling on nooses; he ran home as fast as he could and never went out for the rest of the day. A few months after the six-day war he saw Palestinian refugees pass through Keren on their way to Tessenei. They traveled south to Jeddah, sailed across the Red Sea to the port of Massawa in Eritrea and from there they took a bus to Asmera, passed by Keren and continued to the Sudan. The next leg of their journey took them to Egypt. Many could have hoped to enter Palestine through Sinai, but it was also occupied, together with the Suez Canal. Not so many made it back; like birds that lost their nests, many remained scattered along the way, all over the countries of the region. That sight of Palestinian refugees had been compounded by Eritrean villagers who began to flock to Keren, bringing horror stories with them. In an exodus that would continue for a long time, thousands more escaped to refugee camps in the Sudan. He never thought he would witness more massacres and gruesome scenes, worse than what he had already seen. On the weekend, angry soldiers savagely beat up the people in the streets. Jebha guerrillas had ambushed an army convoy in a hilly area close to Keren and a battle had ensued. The convoy reached a sharp turn on the highway and the rebels sprayed it with heavy gunfire, blasting the leading vehicle. It burned and blocked the road. Soldiers jumped off the trucks and started to return fire. Rebel mortars made the soldiers disperse in confusion. The rebels had been looking for a prize target and one of the two sharpshooters spotted the officer with dark glasses as he crawled towards the rocks to take cover. Laying flat in between two boulders, the sharpshooter trained his gun on him and pulled the trigger, shooting the decorated officer. General Teshome, the commander of the second division of the army, died of the gunshot to his heart. The rebels retreated as fast as they came and disappeared behind the hills. Helicopters that arrived a bit too late failed to locate the rebels and ended up carrying the bodies of the soldiers they had come to rescue. Angry soldiers went on a rampage unleashing their rage at anyone they found on the street. No one knew how Colonel Welana, the commander of the Keren garrison would react, but everyone had a hunch he would avenge the death of his commanding general with brutal force. Soldiers cocked their guns, aimed through the door and windows and sprayed the villagers with bullets, ripping them apart. Blood flooded the floor and submerged the bodies of the innocent victims. Lifeless bodies of women, children, and the old sprawled there, as the soldiers checked for any sign of a breathing soul to finish it off. Only a few survived the slaughter by staying buried beneath the dead. The troops had wasted two hundred and sixty people before returning to town to celebrate. Just like Jemal, they were still not aware of what was in store. Muslim students were given the day off while Christians stayed in school. Jemal and a few friends took a long stroll in that hazy cool morning. They had walked all the way to the west of town passing under the foot of the Tigu fortress, which seemed calm except for some movement of army vehicles. They passed the old hospital building and the new one built by Mr. Hugh and then the government house from which Degiat ruled the region. Degiat had become senile and Janhoi appointed him a councilor at the royal court, a position the king reserved for old hands who were no longer useful; time always shows its cruelty Jemal thought. In the distance, they could hear the noise of army trucks headed north on the Sahel road. The Ethiopian flag on the Tigu fortress flapped gently. They continued their stroll. They stopped at the cinema hall to check what was showing; the poster announced a Western movie starring Clint Eastwood: Though he had watched that movie twice before, Jemal was thinking of watching it again that afternoon. For the rest of the morning an old black and white Egyptian movie that had shown for at least a dozen times was onâ€”Jemal thought it was uninteresting. Jemal and his friends moved forward joking and laughing at no particular thing. Suddenly they heard crack-crack-crack, a sound of distant gunfire coming from the northern part of town. They stopped to listen. The sound of the gunfire became louder and louder and at one time, it seemed so close to where they were. Then the deafening sound of machine gun fire started to blast from the Tigu fortress. Looking towards Tigu, Jemal could see smoke rising to the sky. Everything went silent except for the gunfire and machine gun blasts. Everyone in the streets tried to find the reason for the gunfire but failed. They hurried towards the town center and stopped by an open area where some crowds were forming. A thick black smoke went up from the hills over Ona, a village about a kilometer away from Keren on the road to Sahel. Unable to see anything, they moved to another place close to the elementary school for better visibility. Besekdira could have been a prelude to a greater massacre. Jemal saw soldiers who appeared the size of ants running towards the neighboring village of Waliko on the hills of Ona; they were chasing and shooting at people. It was difficult to tell if the villagers were falling, jumping to the ravines or simply dying where they dropped. The firing went on for about an hour. The smoke grew bigger and bigger and formed a thick umbrella of clouds. The huts of Ona were ablaze and the smoke from the other side of the hill—the location of the bulk of the village—became thicker. No one spoke but everyone repeated words muttered to themselves in disbelief. They were killing the people of Ona. They set Ona ablaze and Jemal felt a burning sensation in his chest, then dryness, and a scream that tried to force its way out of his throat but instead went down to his stomach and bloated his guts. Beads of tears formed in his eyes; Jemal resisted and had to prevent them from flowing. On the side of the street, a few shopkeepers locked their shops and hastily moved away. Others took their wares inside in preparation to close the doors. No one talked but all looked at each other, communicating solemnly through their eyes and worried looks. What would follow next? Will anyone escape that fate? No one wanted to die in the streets, a bad way to die. If he could not escape it, Jemal wanted to go home and await death in his house, with his family, with his loved ones. Moments later, the streets cleared out completely and it looked like a ghost town. A few people moved aimlessly to one direction and then to another, looking up and down as if expecting something to drop from the sky. The chaotic scene continued. Jemal and his friends hurried to their neighborhood just like everybody else. No one uttered a word on the way—there was nothing to say; the noise of gunfire had discouraged their ears from picking up any other sounds. Once in the neighborhood, Jemal and his friends stayed around in the street for the rest of the day, trying to make sense of what they had witnessed. Hours later, still, what happened seemed so unreal. Jemal hoped it was a dream and somehow, someone would wake him up. Assuring her he would be fine, Jemal walked to the alley through the steel gate. He went to the secluded area where he spent evenings during the hours of the curfew, the alley that Ambess the dog had once ruled. The boys sat there all gloomy until they heard sounds of military Jeeps going up and down the street. Peeking through a nail hole in the gate Jemal saw swarms of soldiers nervously standing by the corner of the street and toting their guns. They must have come straight from the killing fields of Ona. They were dusty and heavily armed and they seemed to be salivating like a hyena waiting to devour its prey. A few minutes before six, an old man hurried towards his home racing against time to make it before the curfew time. Maybe that is why the soldiers shouted and stopped him. They questioned and searched him; Jemal could hear their muted voices, faint threats. He pleaded to continue on his way. One of the soldiers slapped him and the second one kicked him with his boots. Then all five soldiers took turns in the beating. The man looked wasted, a total wreck, a litter. He began to crawl. One of the soldiers aimed his gun at the crawling man. A while earlier he would have been grateful to the soldiers for allowing him to go, not minding their cruelty; or he could have imagined they were the last persons he would ever see. They waved to a truck and loaded the unconscious man on it. Jemal had no doubt he would end up dead in a ditch somewhere. A moment later Jemal heard a burst of an Uzi gun behind the building.

The "hill country" is Nazareth, in the times of Augustus Caesar- and the characters are Jemal, an Israelite, and Lucius Quintus, son of the roman Procurator of Judea &#; boys of school age whose mutual respect and liking stems from shared courage.

The monastery is located in the Judean hills next to the city of Beit Shemesh. History[edit] Ancient cisterns have been found here. The name of the site is said to be from its local name in years past , Kfar Gamla, purportedly so named for Rabban Gamliel I , or Gamaliel in Greek " president of the Sanhedrin. The Christian tradition believes that Gamaliel was buried here, as were St. Stephen , the first Christian martyr and Nicodemus. In their remains were disclosed in a dream and discovered by the priest Lucian, and removed at the orders of John, Bishop of Jerusalem, for depositing in the Church of Hagia Sion on Mt. The writing on it was eventually deciphered by Emile Puech, expert in ancient writing from the Ecole Biblique. A diakonikon of a Byzantine church was one of the two spaces or chapels flanking the sanctuary, which often housed holy relics. This is therefore solid evidence for identifying Bet Gemal with the ancient Kfar Gamla, the traditional burial site of St Stephen. They paid a fixed tax-rate of Antonio Belloni, who set up the Beit Gemal School of Agriculture for the benefit of underprivileged youth, especially orphans in Belloni, who is said to have come under the influence of the ideas of John Bosco , joined the Salesians, who then took over the property in The original caption says it was also an agricultural school. Post[edit] There are two separate monasteries, one for men and a second for women, as well as a small and well-appointed church, called St. Stephen , built in on the ruins of a 5th-century Byzantine church discovered on the site discovered in , during works to enlarge the monastery garden. The mosaics on the external walls are those excavated from the Byzantine church. Tradition holds that St. Stephen was buried by Gamaliel in his own private tomb in Caphargamala. The monastery has a small shop that offers its locally made olive oil and red wines. These nuns have taken a vow of silence. In , the monastery suffered from a price tag attack , when the hallway of the monastery was firebombed and the slogans "price tag," "death to the Gentiles," and "revenge" were sprayed on its walls. Chaldees or Chaldeans, the inhabitants of the country of which Babylon was the capital. They were so called till the time of the Captivity 2 Kings 25; Isa. These men cultivated the ancient Cushite language of the original inhabitants of the land, for they had a "learning" and a "tongue" 1: The common language of the country at that time had become assimilated to the Semitic dialect, especially through the influence of the Assyrians, and was the language that was used for all civil purposes. The Chaldeans were the learned class, interesting themselves in science and religion, which consisted, like that of the ancient Arabians and Syrians, in the worship of the heavenly bodies. There are representations of this priestly class, of magi and diviners, on the walls of the Assyrian palaces. Timnath-serah remaining portion, the city of Joshua in the hill country of Ephraim, the same as Timnath-heres Josh. Among these is the supposed tomb of Joshua, which is said to be "the most striking monument in the country. A great number of lamp-niches cover the walls of the porch, upwards of two hundred, arranged in vertical rows. A single cavity with a niche for a lamp has been thought to be the resting-place of the warrior-chief of Israel. A town in the Shephelah, or plain country of Judah Josh. A Phoenician city the Gr. Ecdippa, always retained in their possession though assigned to the tribe of Asher Josh. It is identified with the modern es-Zib, on the Mediterranean, about 8 miles north of Accho. Arphaxad son of Shem, born the year after the Deluge. He died at the age of years Gen. He dwelt in Mesopotamia, and became, according to the Jewish historian Josephus, the progenitor of the Chaldeans. The tendency is to recognize in the word the name of the country nearest the ancient domain of the Chaldeans. Some regard the word as an Egyptized form of the territorial name of Ur Kasdim, or Ur of the Chaldees. Beth-dagon house of Dagon. A city in the low country or plain of Judah, near Philistia Josh. A city near the south-east border of Asher Josh. It was a Philistine colony. The residence of Adoni-bezek, in the lot of Judah Judg. It was in the mountains, not far from Jerusalem. Probably the modern Bezkah, 6 miles south-east of Lydda. The place where Saul numbered the forces of Israel and Judah 1 Sam. Probably the modern Izbik, 13 miles north-east of Shechem. The city of Jobab, one of the early Edomite kings Gen. This place is mentioned by the prophets in later times Isa. Its modern representative is el-Busseireh. It lies in the mountain district of Petra, 20 miles to the south-east of the Dead Sea. A Moabite city in the "plain country" Jer. It is probably the modern Buzrah. Cuthah one of the Babylonian cities or districts from which Shalmaneser transplanted certain colonists to Samaria 2 Kings Some have conjectured that the "Cutheans" were identical with the "Cossaeans" who inhabited the hill-country to the north of the river Choaspes. Cuthah is now identified with Tell Ibrahim, 15 miles north-east of Babylon. Dalmatia a mountainous country on the eastern shore of the Adriatic, a part of the Roman province of Illyricum. It still bears its ancient name. Paul had himself formerly preached in that region Rom. The present Emperor of Austria bears, among his other titles, that of "King of Dalmatia. In the time of Abraham they occupied the country east of Jordan, afterwards the land of the Moabites Gen. They were, like the Anakim, reckoned among the Rephaim, and were conquered by the Moabites, who gave them the name of Emims, i. The Ammonites called them Zamzummims 2: A city in the mountains or hill country of Judah Josh. A town apparently in Benjamin 1 Chr. Giloh exile, a city in the south-west part of the hill-country of Judah Josh. It was the native place or residence of the traitor Ahithophel "the Gilonite" Josh. It has been identified with Kurbet Jala, about 7 miles north of Hebron. Hadrach the name of a country Zech. Rawlinson would identify it with Edessa. It was traversed by Paul in his third missionary journey Rom. It was the farthest district he had reached in preaching the gospel of Christ. This reference to Illyricum is in harmony with Acts As the power of Rome advanced, nations were successively conquered and added to it till it came to designate the whole country to the south of the Alps. There was constant intercourse between Israel and Italy in the time of the Romans. Judea After the Captivity this name was applied to the whole of the country west of the Jordan Hag. But under the Romans, in the time of Christ, it denoted the southernmost of the three divisions of Israel Matt. The province of Judea, as distinguished from Galilee and Samaria, included the territories of the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, Dan, Simeon, and part of Ephraim. Under the Romans it was a part of the province of Syria, and was governed by a procurator. Juttah extended, a Levitical city in the mountains or hill-country of Judah Josh. It is supposed to have been the residence of Zacharias and Elisabeth, and the birthplace of John the Baptist, and on this account is annually visited by thousands of pilgrims belonging to the Greek Church Luke 1: Her nationality is unknown. Through the offshoots of the Keturah line Abraham became the "father of many nations. It is universally cultivated in the East as one of the smaller corn-grasses. This seed is the cenchros of the Greeks. It is called in India warree, and by the Arabs dukhan, and is extensively used for food, being often mixed with other grain. In this country it is only used for feeding birds. Nose-jewels Only mentioned in Isa. They were among the most valued of ancient female ornaments. They "were made of ivory or metal, and occasionally jewelled. They were more than an inch in diameter, and hung upon the mouth. Eliezer gave one to Rebekah which was of gold and weighed half a shekel At the present day the women in the country and in the desert wear these ornaments in one of the sides of the nostrils, which droop like the ears in consequence. They are afterwards named among the conquered tribes Josh. Still lingering in the land, however, they were reduced to servitude by Solomon 1 Kings 9: It is common in the Anti-Libanus. Other species of the poplar are found in Israel, such as the white poplar P. Scythian The Scythians consisted of "all the pastoral tribes who dwelt to the north of the Black Sea and the Caspian, and were scattered far away toward the east. Of this vast country but little was anciently known. Its modern representative is Russia, which, to a great extent, includes the same territories. It appears that in apostolic times there were some of this people that embraced Christianity Col. Sharon, Saron a plain, a level tract extending from the Mediterranean to the hill country to the west of Jerusalem, about 30 miles long and from 8 to 15 miles broad, celebrated for its beauty and fertility 1 Chr. The "rose of Sharon" is celebrated Cant. It is called Lasharon the article la being here a part of the word in Josh. Zamzummims a race of giants; "a people great, and many, and tall, as the Anakims" Deut. They were overcome by the Ammonites, "who called them Zamzummims. It has been conjectured that they might be Ham-zuzims, i. Arabia arid, an extensive region in the south-west of Asia. It extends far into the north in barren deserts, meeting those of Syria and Mesopotamia. It is one of the few countries of the world from which the original inhabitants have never been expelled. It was anciently divided into three parts: Arabia Felix Happy Arabia , so called from its fertility. It embraced a large portion of the country now known by the name of Arabia. The Arabs call it Yemen. It lies between the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf. From this name is derived that which is usually given to the nomadic tribes which wander over this region, the "Bedaween," or, more generally, "Bedouin," 3. It comprehended all the north-west portion of the country, and is much better known to travellers than any other portion. This country is, however, divided by modern geographers into 1 Arabia Proper, or the Arabian Peninsula; 2 Northern Arabia, or the Arabian Desert; and 3 Western Arabia, which includes the peninsula of Sinai and the Desert of Petra, originally inhabited by the Horites Gen.
