Marissa Newman is The Times of Israel political correspondent. Man voting in the town of Beit Shemesh. They will cast two ballots: If no single mayoral candidate receives over 40 percent of the vote on October 30, a second round of voting will be scheduled for November. For the first time, under a new Knesset law, Israelis will be given the day off to vote for their local officials, a change that is geared to jolt voters out of their time-tested indifference toward municipal polls and hike up the traditionally low turnout rates. Those rates stood at a national average of 55 percent. Also marking a historic first, four Druze councils will be holding elections in the Golan Heights for the first time since Israel won control of the area in 1967. Male candidates continue to outnumber women 10 to 1 in seeking leadership positions: Similarly, men and 14 women are running to be heads of regional councils. Ultra-Orthodox supporters of Jerusalem Faction seen throwing campaign fliers in the air on the eve of the municipal elections in the city of Bnei Brak on October 23, Affordable housing, better transportation, good schools, and green spaces, he added. Ofer Kenig of the Israel Democracy Institute. Courtesy of IDI The outcome: Some standouts are successfully branded, but many remain largely indistinguishable from one another, and their detailed but similar policy platforms engender a distinct sense of déjà vu. Many people believe that national politics and ideology like the peace process have no place in local government, but Kenig disagreed. The Israel Democracy Institute tries to encourage the big political parties to be more involved on a local level. It would also help voters distinguish between the candidates. As of this writing, the Interior Ministry has yet to publicize the official, approved lists of mayoral candidates and parties, despite an October 10 deadline and the rapidly approaching vote. The figures below are based on the self-declarations of the candidates and parties. But the minister has failed to convince the local chapter of Likud to support him Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and incumbent Nir Barkat, who left his office to join Likud, have endorsed Elkin. Syriac Orthodox Church and Christianity in Syria Damascus is the capital of Syria and claims to be the oldest continuously inhabited city in the world. In the three accounts Acts 9: Church of Greece Thessaloniki , the major northern Greek city where it is believed Christianity was founded by Paul, thus an Apostolic See , and the surrounding regions of Macedonia , Western and Eastern Thrace , and Epirus , which also extend into the neighboring Balkan states of Albania and Bulgaria , were early centers of Christianity. Nicopolis was a city in the Roman province of Epirus Vetus , today a ruin on the northern part of the western Greek coast. According to the Catholic Encyclopedia: Paul intended going there Titus 3: Paul preached successfully at Corinth, where he lived in the house of Aquila and Priscilla Acts After his departure he was replaced by Apollo , who had been sent from Ephesus by Priscilla. The Apostle visited Corinth at least once more. He wrote to the Corinthians in 57 from Ephesus , and then from Macedonia in the same year, or in The famous letter of St. Clement of Rome to the Corinthian church about 96 exhibits the earliest evidence concerning the ecclesiastical primacy of the Roman Church. Apollo, Lequien II, mentions forty-three bishops: Dionysius ; Paul, brother of St. This was about the year While awaiting the coming of these he tarried in Athens, viewing the idolatrous city, and frequenting the synagogue ; for there were already Jews in Athens. It seems that a Christian community was rapidly formed, although for a considerable time it did not possess a numerous membership. The commoner tradition names the Areopagite as the first head and bishop of the Christian Athenians. Another tradition, however, gives this honour to Hierotheos the Thesmothete. The successors of the first bishop were not all Athenians by lineage. They are catalogued as Narkissos, Publius, and Quadratus. Narkissos is stated to have come from Palestine, and Publius from Malta. In some lists Narkissos is omitted. Quadratus is revered for having contributed to early Christian literature by writing an apology , which he addressed to the Emperor Hadrian. Another Athenian who defended Christianity in writing at a somewhat later time was Aristeides. His apology was directed to the Emperor Marcus Aurelius. Athenagoras also wrote an apology. In the second century there must have been a considerable community of Christians in Athens, for Hygeinos, Bishop of Rome , is said to have written a letter to the community in the year Titus is believed to have been the first bishop. The city was sacked by the pirate Abu Hafs in Christianity in Libya Cyrene and the surrounding region of Cyrenaica or the North African " Pentapolis " , south of the Mediterranean from Greece, the northeastern part of modern Libya , was a Greek colony in North Africa later converted to a Roman province. In addition to Greeks and Romans, there was also a significant Jewish population , at least up to the Kitos War " According to Mark Cyrenians are also mentioned in Acts 2: Theodorus suffered martyrdom under Diocletian ;" " Western Roman Empire[edit].

Share5 Shares I am fascinated by ancient history and the cities in which history played out. While the vast majority of the famous places from the past are now gone, a number still remain – some small and others huge. This list takes a look at ten ancient cities that are still functioning today. I have chosen a day shot and a dusk or night shot for each city. There are definitely some great tourist destinations in this list. Pre BC Plovdiv is in modern day Bulgaria. When it was founded it was called Eumolpias and was a Thracian settlement. It was conquered by the Macedonians and ultimately became part of what is now known as Bulgaria. It is second in size and importance to the capital city of Sofia which is about kilometres away from it. It is capital city of Israel though not all countries recognise this fact. In antiquity it was the famed City of David from the Bible and later the place where Jesus began his last week of life. The city is full of ancient ruins, monuments, and still contains the ancient wall built in the Ming Dynasty – pictured here. It also holds the tomb of Qin Shi Huang which is most famous for the terracotta army. Its most famous site is the Great Pyramid of Cholula which now looks like a hill with a church atop; in fact the hill is the pyramid base. The pyramid temple is the largest in the new world. Jains and Hindus consider it to be a holy city and believe that if you die there you will attain salvation. It is the oldest habited city in India and one of the oldest in the world. Found along the river Ganges are gats – stops along the way in which believers can perform religious ablutions in the river. It is the oldest city in Western Europe – predating London, Rome, and the like. Religious and funerary monuments exist there from the neolithic age and archeological evidence also suggests that it was once an important trading post for the Phoenicians. In it was struck by a devastating earthquake which almost completely destroyed it due to the fires and a Tsunami – it is one of the deadliest quakes in history. Its 3, year history is a fascinating one and much of the culture and customs of the ancient Athenians found there way into many other cultures due to its dominance in the region as a vast city-state. The multitude of archeological sites make this the perfect city for visit for anyone with a passion for European history and culture. It has been named in the top 12 cultural heritage sites most in danger of being destroyed or suffering irreparable loss. Only time will tell whether this ancient city will survive or be relegated to history as another ancient city lost to the world. Constantinople fell to the Turks who established the Ottoman Empire in its place which survived until when the Sultanate was abolished and the Republic of Turkey created. Arteifacts of both the Roman and Ottoman empires remain to this day in Istanbul with probably the most significant being the Hagia Sofia – originally a Church but converted to a Mosque under the Islamic ottomans and then a museum under the republic.
