John Luke and Mary Kate Robertson have taken the next step in their relationship by welcoming a new addition to their family. But it looks like Willie and Korie will have to wait a little longer for their first grandchild, since the new addition happens to be an adorable puppy.

Robertson, James Randal Rust T Physically, Robertson stood close to six feet tall, with dark hair, blue eyes, and a fair complexion. All descriptions of his personality point to an individual who was soft spoken and even-tempered, a person who maintained an inner composure regardless of external circumstances. Charlotte Reeves, who married Robertson in , admired these traits. The daughter of a minister, Charlotte Robertson also persevered under the harsh frontier conditions and established a reputation for resourcefulness and strength. She and Robertson had thirteen children, two of whom died in infancy. In late , as Robertson grew increasingly frustrated with the provincial rule of North Carolina Governor William Tryon, he became intrigued by the stories of the land west of the Appalachian Mountains and began to consider relocating his family there. Late that year, he crossed the mountains and found a suitable site in the upper Holston Valley near the Watauga River. To establish his claim, he planted corn and built a corncrib and a cabin. On the return trip, Robertson became lost and wandered aimlessly for approximately two weeks before hunters directed him across the mountains. In May , when the Watauga settlers met to establish a government, they selected Robertson as one of the five magistrates to lead the Watauga Association. In addition, he was elected commander of the Watauga Fort. In Richard Henderson of the Transylvania Land Company purchased a large tract of land from the Cherokees, including most of what constitutes present-day Middle Tennessee. There they selected a suitable location for a new settlement. Late that same year, Robertson returned with a group of men to prepare temporary shelter for friends and relatives, who planned to join them in a few months. The men arrived on Christmas Day and drove their cattle across the frozen Cumberland River. Crude cabins were erected for immediate winter housing, and a fort was built atop a bluff along the river. The fort was named Fort Nashborough, in honor of Francis Nash, who had fought alongside Robertson at the battle of Alamance in . A faction of Cherokees known as the Chickamaugas opposed the Transylvania Purchase and warned the new settlers that trouble would follow their claim to the land. Attacks on the Cumberland settlement lasted several years and reached a peak between and . Another son, Jonathan, was scalped. Robertson narrowly escaped death on two occasions. Once he was shot in the foot while hoeing corn. Another time he was ambushed along a trail and received gunshot wounds in both wrists. The following year, President George Washington appointed him brigadier general of the U. Army of the same region. Eventually attacks on the community decreased, and the population rose with the arrival of new settlers. As the Cumberland settlement entered a period of prosperity, the Robertsons built a comfortable brick home. Occasionally, Robertson acted on behalf of the federal government to assist in the treaty negotiations with various Indian tribes. In he was commissioned U. Indian agent to the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations. His final mission took him to the Chickasaw Agency at Chickasaw Bluff. In his seventies, Robertson made the trip during heavy rains that forced him to swim several swollen creeks along the way. As a result, he became ill and died on September 1, . His remains were later returned to Nashville, where he received a formal burial in the City Cemetery. Suggested Reading Anita S. From Frontier to City ; Thomas E. Few, even in the Labour Party, gave Robinson much chance of winning the presidency, not least because of an internal party row over her nomination. With the Labour Party the first name for a possible candidate was an elderly former Minister for Health, and hero to the left, Noel Browne. Browne was a household name for having done more than anybody else in Ireland for tackling Tuberculosis in the s. He was critical of its ties with Fine Gael and had co-founded the short lived Socialist Labour Party in , after leaving the Labour Party. Although he was supported by left wing members within Labour such as Michael D. Higgins , he had little or no contact with Dick Spring , therefore had to live in hope of being nominated without the endorsement of the party leadership. The possibility that Browne might be nominated raised the possibility of an internal argument within the party. The fact that Browne was enthusiastic for candidacy, in a contest where Labour never before contested, now acted as pressure for Labour to find a candidate. In these circumstances, the decision to propose Robinson proved to be politically inspired. Robinson had an advantage in being the first candidate nominated for the election and the first female , in that she could cover more meetings, public addresses and interviews. However she refused to be drawn on specifics in case she would alienate possible support. Robinson also received the backing of the Irish Times newspaper, and this proved hugely advantageous. Fine Gael had previously gambled that former Taoiseach Garret FitzGerald would run as its candidate, even though he had insisted for two years that he would not run for office. When it was apparent that FitzGerald would not budge from his refusal, Fine Gael approached another senior figure, Peter Barry , who had previously been willing to run but had run out of patience and was no longer interested. In three decades in politics, Lenihan had become very popular, and was widely seen as humorous and intelligent. Like Robinson he had himself delivered liberal policy reform abolished censorship in the s, for example. When the campaign began, Lenihan was seen as a near certainty to win the presidency. The only question asked was whether Robinson would beat Currie and come second. Crucial to her appeal was the deep unpopularity of the then Taoiseach Charles Haughey and the rising popularity of the Labour Party leader Dick Spring. Election campaign[edit] The head start that Robinson attained in the nomination process, and the fact that the Fine Gael candidate was from Northern Ireland[citation needed], resulted in Robinson attaining second place in the polls. At this point a transfer pact was decided upon between Fine Gael and Labour, as both parties were normally preferred partners for each other in general elections. However the Fine Gael candidate felt shortchanged by this deal as the media was more interested in the Robinson campaign, and privately he did not like Robinson. Currie later remarked that Lenihan was his personal friend, and that he felt personally sick at being asked to endorse somebody he did not like, for the sake of beating Lenihan. However, the issue nearly brought down the government. Haughey distanced himself from Lenihan, as he did not want any share in the blame. Many canvassers now restarted the campaign to get Lenihan elected. Robinson now became President, the first woman to hold the office, and the first candidate to be second on first preference votes to win the presidency. She proved a remarkably popular President, earning the praise of Brian Lenihan himself who, before his death five years later, said that she was a better President than he ever could have been. Robinson brought to the presidency legal knowledge, deep intellect and political experience. She reached out to the Irish diaspora the large number of Irish emigrants and people of Irish descent. Her political profile changed also. Charles Haughey , Taoiseach when she was elected and who had had to dismiss her rival, Brian Lenihan when the Progressive Democrats , the smaller party in government, threatened to leave the government unless he was sacked had a diffident relationship with her[citation needed], at one stage preventing her from delivering the prestigious BBC Dimbleby Lecture. Robinson delivered two such addresses. She was also invited to chair a committee to review the workings of the United Nations, but declined[citation needed] when asked to by the Irish government, who feared that her involvement might make it difficult for it to oppose the proposals that would result. However, the Government refused to formally advise her not to meet with him. She felt it would be wrong, in the absence of such formal advice, for her as head of state not to meet the local Member of Parliament, during her visit, and was photographed publicly shaking his hand. To the surprise of her critics, who had seen her as embodying liberalism that the Catholic Church disapproved of, she had a close working relationship with the Church. The outfit she wore was condemned by a controversial young priest, Fr. She visited Irish nuns and priests abroad, Irish famine relief charities, attended international sports events, met the Pope and, against pressure from the Taoiseach, Charles Haughey, not to do so, was the only head of state to meet the 14th Dalai Lama during his tour of Europe. She visited Rwanda where she brought world attention to the suffering in that state in the aftermath of its civil war. After her visit, she spoke at a press conference, where she became visibly emotional. As a lawyer trained to be rational, she was furious at her emotion, but it moved many who saw it. One media critic who had slated her presidential ideas in The New York Times, journalist and Sunday Tribune editor Vincent Browne, passed her a note at the end of the press conference saying simply "you were magnificent. By halfway through her term of office her popularity rating reached an unprecedented 93 per cent. The Irish Government stated that her announcement "was not unexpected" and wished her "every success". High Commissioner for Human Rights [edit] Robinson became the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on 12 September, resigning the presidency a few weeks early in order to take up the post. Media reports suggested that she had been head-hunted for the post by Secretary General of the United Nations Kofi Annan, to assume an advocacy as opposed to administrative role, in other words to become a public campaigner outlining principles rather than the previous implementational and consensus-building model. The belief was that the post had ceased to be seen as the voice of general principles and had become largely bureaucratic. Robinson in Somalia, In November, still new to her post, Robinson delivered the Romanes Lecture in Oxford on the topic of "Realizing Human Rights"; she spoke of the "daunting challenge" ahead of her, and how she intended to set about her task. She concluded the lecture with words from The Golden Bough: Otherwise, no matter how much strength you muster, you never will manage to quell it or cut it down with the toughest of blades. Women who did not wear the headscarf were criticized, and Robinson said that it "played into the hands of religious conservatives. The conference drew widespread criticism, as did Robinson. Former US Congressman Tom Lantos said, "To many of us present at the events at Durban, it is clear that much of the responsibility for the debacle rests on the shoulders of UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Mary Robinson, who, in her role as secretary-general of the conference, failed to provide the leadership needed to keep the conference on track. Michael Rubin even went so far as to suggest in a tongue-in-cheek article that she be tried for war crimes for presiding over "an intellectual pogrom against Jews and Israel. Mandela announced the formation of this new group, The Elders, in a speech he delivered on the occasion of his 89th birthday. Robinson and Carter called on the UN Security Council to act on what they described as the inhumane conditions in Gaza, and mandate an end to the siege. During a session with fellow Elder Kofi Annan, Mary Robinson encouraged 1, young leaders from countries to lead on intergenerational issues such as climate change and the need for action to take place now, not tomorrow. Post president period [edit].

There is, however, primary and direct evidence that [] General James Robertson was the son of the [] John Robertson who died in Johnston (now Wake) County, North Carolina before April [31], and there is primary and direct evidence that [] John Robertson was the son of [12] Israel and Sarah Roberson of Bristol Parish, Prince George.

Harllee naturally assumed that he owned land in Lunenburg County on that date. The deed records of Lunenburg Co. My research in the Lunenburg County land records and court minutes demonstrated that there were five crown patents and three purchase deeds issued to a John Robertson or variant from the earliest days of the Colony to 3 Sept. This deed shows that the elder 2. John Roberson died before could write his name and that the younger John Roberson, Jun. John Robertson died before April of Johnston County, is shown to be illiterate by his will and by several sale deeds associated with the properties he owned, and his wife is consistently named as Mary in all pertinent documents produced during his lifetime and throughout his probate. John Roberson died before of Johnston County appears on none of the Lunenburg County tithable lists. Properties f and g belonged to a John Robertson who died in Chesterfield Co. Richard Robertson of the County of Chesterfield John Robertson of Johnston County had passed away before April John Robertson died before April of Johnston County is proved to have died. Betty Robertson Riley writes that this man is John Robinson born ca. John Robinson, administrator, and William Hayward [Howard] Riley, John Robinson born ca. John Robinson of Lunenburg County, Virginia John Robertson purchased the Sixpound Creek land on 3 Sept. He still owned the Little Creek land on that date. However, the only John Robertson or variant to participate in all of Granville County was the 4. Private "John Robinson" who was a member of Capt. Israel and Sarah Robinson, or Robertson, in the Bristol Parish birth records, and they are named as sons and heirs in 3. Although he sold his Little Creek land on 3 March , 4. John Roberson still appears on the Sept. John Robertson, later of Johnston County. Although William Timmons claims that 2. John Robertson of Nutbush Creek owned the Little Creek land, there is no evidence of a plurality in the tax and militia lists, and there are strong indications that the land in question actually pertained to 4. John Robertson, late of Johnston County. First, the transmittal deed clearly states that the 4. John Robertson who owned the Granville County land was living on it on 6 Dec. Second, the consideration of " John Robinson of Lunenburg Co. He lived on this land until his death in A round of quacks for the newlyweds! Duck Dynasty's John Luke Robertson married his fiancée, Mary Kate McEachern, on Saturday, June 27, Us Weekly can exclusively confirm. "I had an amazing time.

Apart from the thoroughness of his research and the passion he had for the precise transmission of history through the medium of genealogy, Tom was simply one hell of a guy. He was enigmatic in a time when it is usually all too easy to categorize people into neat slots. While we differed in opinions on many topics -- most notably politics -- we saw eye-to-eye when it came to genealogy and the need for rigid scholarship in the field, something often sorely lacking in the plethora of unsourced material so prevalent on the internet. Quite simply, Tom was my friend, my compatriot, my research partner. I have put off the task of reworking portions of this site -- even of commenting publicly about his death -- simply because the subject has been too painful. Through the generosity of several people interested in his research into the Robertson lines, the continued existence of this site has been assured for several years to come. This is, without a doubt, the finest memorial he could have asked for. Control of these pages has passed to me, and it is a monumental responsibility. I have begun simply, by performing a little house-keeping. I have done a little cleaning up of the HTML code to remove all the code that generates new windows for links except the links to PDF files and adding notes to off-site links. I also hope to add new resources such as newly-available military records as they come to my attention. I will not be making any major changes to the work Tom has done; that would be more than a little presumptuous, given his superior talents in that arena. If you have corrections, additions or comments of any other kind concerning this site or the information housed here, you can contact me at robgenex aol. Brayton, a professional genealogist from Memphis, Tennessee [1], published a lineage for [] General James Robertson [note: In , I began to check Mr. In the case of Charles Robertson, I located a previously unknown deed that states the relationship between father and son in unequivocal terms [6]. There is further evidence of the relationship in two additional wills [7]. The primary documents themselves established the relationships [10], and any discrepancies with the hearsay evidence were resolved through ordinary means [11]. The fact that the documents that prove the connections have remained in official custody since their creation, some years ago, can only add to their evidentiary value [12]. Thompson has generously shared with this author the testaments dative for John Robertson the elder and younger of Guay, which were confirmed by the Commissary Court of Dunkeld on August 2, and May 5, , respectively, and an eik, or codicil, to the will of John Robertson the elder confirmed on August 1, [26]. The testament dative for John Robertson the Younger of Guay establishes that he entered into a marriage contract with Janet Cameron on July 14, , that the couple had children named John and Elspeth or Elizabeth Robertson, and that Janet Cameron was his spouse on May 5, when the Commissary of Dunkeld confirmed his will [27]. Thus, he was not the [] John Robertson who was said to have married Mary Gower. The eik names the same people and relationships [29].
