

1: John Reese () - Find A Grave Memorial

John Reese is a fictional character on the CBS crime drama television series Person of Interest. www.enganchecubano.com is portrayed by Jim Caviezel. www.enganchecubano.com is an intense, solitary man whose dry sense of humor emerges over time.

His real last name is unknown, but military records indicate that John is his real first name. Marshal called Brad Jennings, used when he was able to acquire their badges. He is soon transferred to homicide at the same precinct as Detective Lionel Fusco, and became his partner. Reese is also known as "the Man in the Suit" or "guy in the suit" by law enforcement and criminals pursuing him. Contents Biography Early Life John was an adopted child that had no contact with his birth family, although whether or not they were alive is unknown. The death of his adoptive father in such a heroic way inspired John to save lives himself. He opted for the military, and entered the Army shortly thereafter. He is listed by the Army as M. Over the next nine years, he served four short tours and one long tour of duty, including service in Afghanistan and Iraq. He appears to have been promoted to the rank of Sergeant on September 15, 2005. As the vacation is extended beyond the weekend, Reese surprises Jessica with the news. Moments later, the two witness a live television report about the attacks on the World Trade Center and Reese knows his service is far from over, prompting him to re-enlist. At some point while overseas, Reese was captured and tortured with electricity for sixteen hours for just his name. She tells him that she is engaged to a man named Peter Arndt, though she would wait for him if he told her to. After a silence, she turns and leaves. Moments later, Reese whispers, "Wait for me. This is presumably his first CIA operation. Stanton promptly murders them, knowing that they helped Nazir flee the country after a hefty bribe. Reese, visibly shocked, is told to dispose of the gun and bodies. When Kara cracks a joke, Reese ignores it and she tells him to lighten up. As they watch the couple flirt, Kara suggests that Reese might play along with their own cover. Once the bar clears out, Kara shoots out the camera and Reese goes over to kill their targets. After killing the couple, the two go back to their apartment and clean out any traces of their presence. Kara tells Reese that they can take a break. She reminds him that he chose this life. Reese then slams her into a wall and says that he loves his work, and they kiss. Beale compliments Reese on his test scores before giving them their assignment, which is to investigate Paul Duncan who may be stealing from a co-operative project between the CIA and the Pentagon called "Desert Rain" which supplied light arms to the Afghan National Police and Army. The operation was being conducted without congressional approval. He and Stanton question Duncan and search his accommodations. Reese shoots Duncan when he begins to demand they leave and Stanton uncovers the money under a false back in his briefcase. Stanton tells Reese that the real reason Beale chose him was that he had nothing to lose and nothing to go back to, with his adoptive family being dead and having walked away from Jessica without hesitation. Men who are working for Greer open fire on them and Dillinger is able to escape with Casey, but Reese and Stanton still are able to capture one of the wounded shooters. Reese and Stanton torture their prisoner, who eventually manages to get up while still bound to his chair and jump out of a window to his death. Casey turns around and begs for his life when Reese gets a call from Stanton. While Stanton is busy with the suspect, Reese receives a voicemail call from Jessica who sounds distraught. Later, Mark Snow and Alicia Corwin inform Reese and Stanton that they are being sent to China to retrieve a high profile computer virus stolen from the Pentagon by the Chinese. Reese is denied his request for leave, but as Stanton leaves the room, he receives another set of orders from Snow: Reese finds a survivor whom Stanton converses with in Chinese. He says that men had turned up shooting and had stolen the Machine. It is not clear if Reese knew Chinese at the time, or if, since then, he has learned Chinese or the meaning of what the man said. With much of what they came for already taken, Reese and Stanton have no choice but to wait for their extraction at nightfall. Meanwhile, they do find a laptop and take it, but they are confused as to what it is and what it holds and why it was left behind. After nightfall, Stanton marks the LZ with infra-red chem-lights. Reese has readied his gun to shoot her in the back, but lowers it at the last moment only for Stanton to turn and shoot him. She apologizes, saying she had orders from Snow and was told Reese had ties to terrorists. Reese who is wearing body armor, laughs, telling her he had the same orders and that they have been set up with the chem-lights actually marking a missile strike not an extraction. Reese then makes his escape, leaving Stanton standing in shock. Overhead, a UAV observes as an incoming cruise missile targets the beacons. The wounded Reese manages to escape the blast radius, and turns back to see the explosion supposedly killing his partner. In February, a wounded Reese, now sporting a beard, travels to New Rochelle.

JOHN THE WHAT? JOHN REESE pdf

2: John Reese - Works | Archive of Our Own

John Reese is the alias of a former member of the U.S. Army Special Forces and CIA National Clandestine Service (NCS) Special Activities Division (SAD) officer who works with Harold Finch to stop future crimes using numbers generated by the Machine.

According to his military records, John is in fact his first name, with a middle initial of H, while his last name begins with the letters TAL and ends with an S. He was born on May 1. He describes himself as having no friends and no family. It is mentioned that his father served in the Army and died as a war hero after his fourth tour in Vietnam. Army to avoid a jail sentence, where he served as an Infantryman , Ranger and Special Forces soldier with the 1st Special Forces Group , before discharged as a Sergeant First Class after 12 years of service. On a vacation to Mexico, he tells Jessica that he has left the Army just as Jessica witnesses the Twin Towers fall on television, and they both realize his career is far from over. Some time after that, they meet by chance in an airport, where a newly engaged Jessica gives John a final opportunity to save their relationship by asking her to wait for him; he is unable to do so. Sometime in he is partnered with Kara Stanton , and they are assigned to black ops activities by their handler, Mark Snow. Although Reese demonstrates the skills necessary to conduct the missions to which he is assigned, he shows some hesitation to commit fully to them as he lacks the ruthlessness shown by Kara. He gradually lets go of his inhibitions, becoming a cold-blooded killer. Together, he and Kara participate in a number of successful missions, several of which illegally take place in the U. On a break between missions, Reese, who has kept track of Jessica, meets her husband, Peter Arndt in a bar, but leaves before Peter can "introduce" Jessica to Reese. In , while on a mission in the Middle East, Reese receives a voice mail from Jessica asking him to call her. Reese returns her call, telling her he will be with her in twenty-four hours, and to wait for him. He requests leave but instead is sent to China on a top-secret mission by Snow. Their mission is to enter an abandoned Chinese city and recover a highly sensitive laptop computer. Unknown to one another, Snow tells both agents that the other has been compromised, and is to be killed at the end of the mission. Entering the city, Reese and Stanton find the workers where the laptop is believed to be kept newly dead of gunshot wounds, but they are able to safely recover the laptop. Having completed their mission, Stanton summons their transportation with beacons, and Reese contemplates killing her, and decides against it. However, before he can explain this to her, she turns and shoots Reese. Badly injured, Reese makes his escape without shooting Stanton, realizing Snow wants the laptop destroyed, not recovered, and would have acted to assure both operatives were eliminated that night. As he runs from the building, he watches it destroyed by air strike, Stanton seemingly killed as a result. It is unclear how Reese found his way back to the U. Instead he learns she was killed in a car crash two months earlier. From there he travels to her home in New Rochelle, New York, and breaks in. He sits quietly, watching videos of Jessica while waiting for Peter to return home. When Peter arrives, they argue briefly before Reese approaches the poker-wielding widower. Activities with Harold Finch[edit] I offered you a job, Mr. One day in the spring of , he confronts a group of young men harassing passengers on the subway, resulting in their arrest. Carter recognizes his skills as military in origin, but Reese says little in response to her questions, piquing her curiosity. A fingerprint check suggests Reese has been at several recent crime scenes, but before Carter can learn more, Reese leaves with an expensive attorney. They are met by a car and driver, which takes him to a park under the Queensboro Bridge , where Reese first meets Harold Finch. At first, Reese is suspicious of Finch and his claims to know "everything" about him. Finch explains that he has a list of people in need of help, pointing out a woman at a coffee cart who is on the top of the list. Finch offers Reese a chance to help the people on his list, explaining he wants Reese to follow the woman and do what needs to be done to help her, all expenses paid. Reese refuses, describing Finch as a "bored rich guy" who has probably staged the whole situation for his amusement. Reese returns to his room, where he changes into clean clothing, cuts his hair and shaves off his beard in order to change his appearance. He was fast asleep drinking cheap rye whiskey while the television blares, but awakens in a hotel room cable-tied to the bed. The phone rings; it is Finch insisting his information is never wrong. Reese hears the sounds of a woman under attack nearby and quickly frees himself. Breaking into the next room, he finds Finch with a recording of a woman murdered three years earlier. Having made his point to an angry Reese, Finch promises he will never lie to him, unlike the government he left, and that he believes all Reese wants to do is protect people. Certain that Finch is not government, Reese asks who Finch is, and is told he is a "concerned third party" who can offer Reese the chance to help people who otherwise have none. Finch takes Reese to his hidden workplace, a disused library Finch bought via a bank he controls. As Reese undertakes his investigation, he and Finch establish their working model: Reese in the field and Finch on the computer continuously connected by cell phone and ear bud as each report to the other. He presses Finch for more details about where he gets his information. They walk through a park and Reese listens as Finch tells him about the Machine, his role in its development, and how it creates the relevant and irrelevant lists. With more information, and an additional identity, NYPD Detective Stills, stolen from one of the corrupt cops, he continues with the case. Once it is closed, and having enlisted the reluctant assistance of Detective Lionel Fusco, Reese commits to working with Finch. Over time, Reese and Finch come to trust one another, and then gradually become friends. Finch generally refers to Reese as Mr. Reese, using his first name only when concerned. Later, when fully funded by Finch, he opts for simple dark suits, worn first with an open-collared colored shirt, and finally with his trademark white shirt, along with a black wool topcoat in cold weather. He also wears concealable white body armor under his shirt. The nickname soon leads to Reese becoming something of an urban legend in New York. According to the legend, a tall, nicely dressed man in a suit often shows up unexpectedly and always in time to halt a violent crime from happening, saving innocents and injuring perpetrators, to varying degrees, in the process. Death[edit] In the series finale, "return 0", Reese sacrifices himself to hold off Samaritan agents to enable the Machine to destroy Samaritan. Guided by the Machine, Reese holds off the Samaritan agents but is gunned down moments before a cruise missile destroys the building. He is intelligent, resourceful, and hyper-vigilant. His quick-thinking often helps him deal with any sticky situation. He has highly developed hand-to-hand combat techniques, and can easily take on multiple opponents at once. He maintains a small arsenal in his home, and can use a variety of handguns and assault weapons efficiently. He is also shown to be ambidextrous, often switching a gun between hands as conditions require, but this skill is never spoken of. He is also adept with a knife, and at improvising weapons from the various materials he finds at hand.

3: John Rees (activist) - Wikipedia

Summary: In Episode 93, we welcome entrepreneur, author, and quant investor, John Reese. We start with John's background. When John was a child, his father was a subscriber to Value Line, and John related to the charts and numbers.

What combinations are effective? Personal Capital Transcript of Episode Join us as we discuss the craft of investing and uncover new and profitable ideas all to help you grow wealthier and wiser. Better investing starts here. All opinions expressed by podcast participants are solely their own opinions and do not reflect the opinion of Cambria Investment Management or its affiliates. For more information, visit cambriainvestments. Person Capital offers insightful free tools that help manage all of your finances in a single location with one secure login. The tools are free, personalized, easy to set up and use, and give investors a convenient way into gaining transparency into their finances. For a holistic picture of my financial life, including investments, and overall net worth. To learn more and claim two months free, just go to personalcapital. And now on to the show. Today, we have an amazing show with you with one of the most respected quants out there. Thank you very much, Meb. I know your investment history, have known you for awhile, but some of the podcast listeners may not. So maybe talk a little bit about the arc that set you upon setting up Validea. Well, there were two or three little things that led up to this and a big thing. One that goes back to when I was still in elementary school, my father subscribed to Value Line. So every single week, he had this great magazine or issue of stocks with a lot of different quantitative data that piqued my interest in the stock market and stayed with me for a number of years. And I was highly could related to both the charts and the numbers. Then I went to MIT to study electronic computers. And my project was basically how to take wisdom and information from books and translate the ideas into computer programs. So that computer programs could actually implement the knowledge that was in books. That also was the second piece that would come to be useful many, many years later. Then the third piece is after getting my MBA and going out in the business world, I started my own company, grew that over nine years, sold it GE Capital. And then, I was looking how to invest my own money and this time for real. And at that point, I embarked upon a research project. Whose strategy should I essentially follow? Therefore, I was unable to identify one key source of who indeed should I follow for the best recommendations. Two good first choices, by the way. Everybody should absolutely read them. It will make them positively better investors. And I continued on, ultimately over the following few years. I codified 12 different gurus, and created a website, this was in the days actually just before , when the internet was actually just starting to take off and I was sharing my research on the website, and allowed people tools with which they could evaluate stocks. And basically, x-ray the stocks from the best interpretation with Warren Buffet, with Peter Lynch, with Benjamin Graham, what would they think of that stock. And more explicitly, they would say exactly what. If they liked the stocks you could basically see it. So one of the challenges from being a quant, you know, is that some of these managers, like a Peter Lynch, or Warren Buffet may have some, sort of, messy qualitative sort of assessments. Was there any time, kind of, as you were looking at these, where you saw some gray areas or was it actually pretty easy to quantify them? Did It matter at all? Maybe talk a little bit about the process of the first decade of doing this, kinda what you learned putting these together. Well, you ask a very good question. It actually was a very challenging process. Most books I actually had to read minimum of five times to really understand the detail of what was being said. In addition, I had to carefully look at each example explained by the author of a particular stock that he picked out and why he picked that. Does it reveal some sort of preference? Does it reveal a certain threshold of bias? Are there companies with certain debt to equity ratios that he would allow or no allow? So many times, that there were these revisions for it. And then on top of that, you also have various industrious legendary authors who come up with revised books and methodology. And one of the things that was very interesting, because I also implemented their revised methodology, in almost every case, their original methodology remains superior to their new revised methodology. And that makes total sense. You know, a lot of people revise them based on either what they expect the future to happen or revise them based on very recent performance. So one or two more questions on this general process and we can kinda dig into maybe some of the specific models and stuff. How did you kind of think about filtering you know, this list? Because I feel like this could be like an endless process of coming up with like possible portfolios. One of first key factors is, is there a long-term track record. Somebody who has a one or three-year track record just does not count. So the longer the track record, the better. That was the first key thing. Then the second key thing is that most of the books actually do not have the clarity with which you can extract the rules. For instance, a strategy that says you want to buy a company managed by excellent quality managers, that is not sufficient to implement. How do you define an excellent quality manager? Yeah, I was gonna say, you ask 10 quants what quality means. And they literally had 40 different factors that they put under the category of quality. And they were all totally, for the most part, many very different. So I can totally sympathise with that. That is so true. How low is low? What earnings do you use in the price to earnings ratio? Over what period of time is the earnings? So there are a number of different criteria. And so are you picking, then doing another screen to pick a consistent portfolio, yadda, yadda. So your, one, screen was it needs to be potable. How, then, do you kinda come down to this final list of final number? You have the Bloomburgs and FactSet. Was this something you had to build by hand? How did you kinda go about doing this in particularly the early days? First of all, the very first model with Peter Lynch. I actually started with an Excel spreadsheet. And had to therefore, retrieve the data by hand a number of data points. It actually took about two hours to evaluate a particular stock. Then I was able to, over the years, subscribe to institutional databases. At one time, it was Multex, and then over the years it became Thompson Reuters, as an example, where you were able to get virtually complete fundamental data sets across the entire U. And I was able to then, obviously using programming techniques draw and do database analysis of the particular stocks. So that became a tremendous helpful. So the screens actually were implemented not as a Bloomberg head screener, but in code using artificial intelligence techniques that actually go about thinking and making the statement the same way that the guru said that he went about selecting stocks. And usually there are interesting variations of this. Peter Lynch as an example, would not apply price to earnings criteria for companies with less than a billion dollars in sales, just as an example. And depending on how you talk about it, it gives totally different historical readings, and often different takeaways. And so, I think, you mentioned in time in a world of probably or thousands of factors, you know, the specifics can actually make a big difference. But, you know, often with strategies or managers in this case, you know, hopefully they have a long track record. Do you have any general thoughts there or any suggestions? Yes, that is definitely a hard one. Where I basically lean on that is what is the length of the track record, where this actually works? And it is the fact that they go out of favour for sometimes long periods of time, that allow it to come back in favour. I mean, if you look at a lot of managers, I mean, was kind of a graveyard for really famous hedge fund managers finally giving up. A lot of the stocks he loved in the early s had monster performance. And by the way, Buffet is actually a good one. How that actually gets implemented when I do it is based upon a particular process that first starts to ask is this even a Buffet-type of company?

4: The Wacky Mind Of John Reese by John Reese on Apple Podcasts

John Rees (born) is a left-wing British political activist and writer who is a national officer of the Stop the War Coalition, and founding member of www.enganchecubano.com is currently a Visiting Research Fellow at Goldsmiths, University of London.

He is played by Jim Caviezel. Reese is an intense, solitary man whose dry sense of humor emerges over time. He speaks in a low, calm and confident voice, despite the fact that people are almost always after him or the people he is protecting. He works with Harold Finch , a reclusive private billionaire software genius, to help residents of New York who are potentially involved in violent crime. Extremely skilled with a range of weapons and hand-to-hand combat techniques, Reese is nonetheless possessed of a level of humanity that drives him to work with Finch to protect potential victims of violent crime. According to his military records, John is in fact his first name, with a middle initial of H, while his last name ends with an S. He was born on May 1. He describes himself as having no friends and no family. It is mentioned that his father died after his tour in Vietnam. On a vacation to Mexico, he tells Jessica that he has left the Army just as Jessica witnesses the Twin Towers fall on television, and they both realize his career is far from over. Some time after that, they meet by chance in an airport, where a newly engaged Jessica gives John a final opportunity to save their relationship by asking her to wait for him; he is unable to do so. He is partnered with Kara Stanton , and they are assigned to black ops activities by their handler, Mark Snow. Although Reese demonstrates the skills necessary to conduct the missions to which he is assigned, he shows some hesitation to commit fully to them as he lacks the ruthlessness shown by Kara. He gradually lets go of his inhibitions, becoming a cold-blooded killer. Together, he and Kara participate in a number of successful missions, several of which illegally take place in the U. On a break between missions, Reese, who has kept track of Jessica, meets her husband, Peter Arndt in a bar, but leaves before Peter can "introduce" Jessica to Reese. In , while on a mission in the Middle East, Reese receives a voice mail from Jessica asking him to call her. Reese returns her call, telling her he will be with her in twenty-four hours, and to wait for him. He requests leave but instead is sent to China on a top-secret mission by Snow. Their mission is to enter an abandoned Chinese city and recover a highly sensitive laptop computer. Unknown to one another, Snow tells both agents that the other has been compromised, and is to be killed at the end of the mission. Entering the city, Reese and Stanton find the workers where the laptop is believed to be kept newly dead of gunshot wounds, but they are able to safely recover the laptop. Having completed their mission, Stanton summons their transportation with beacons, and Reese contemplates killing her, and decides against it. However, before he can explain this to her, she turns and shoots Reese. Badly injured, Reese makes his escape without shooting Stanton, realizing Snow wants the laptop destroyed, not recovered, and would have acted to assure both operatives were eliminated that night. As he runs from the building, he watches it destroyed by air strike, Stanton seemingly killed as a result. It is unclear how Reese found his way back to the U. Instead he learns she was killed in a car crash two months earlier. From there he travels to her home in New Rochelle, New York, and breaks in. He sits quietly, watching videos of Jessica while waiting for Peter to return home. When Peter arrives, they argue briefly before Reese approaches the poker-wielding widower. Activities with Harold Finch I offered you a job, Mr. One day in the spring of , he confronts a group of young men harassing passengers on the subway, resulting in their arrest. Carter recognizes his skills as military in origin, but Reese says little in response to her questions, piquing her curiosity. A fingerprint check suggests Reese has been at several recent crime scenes, but before Carter can learn more, Reese leaves with an expensive attorney. They are met by a car and driver, which takes him to a park under the Queensboro Bridge , where Reese first meets Harold Finch. At first, Reese is suspicious of Finch and his claims to know "everything" about him. Finch explains that he has a list of people in need of help, pointing out a woman at a coffee cart who is on the top of the list. Finch offers Reese a chance to help the people on his list, explaining he wants Reese to follow the woman and do what needs to be done to help her, all expenses paid. Reese refuses, describing Finch as a "bored rich guy" who has probably staged the whole situation for his amusement. Reese returns to his room, where he changes into clean clothing, cuts his hair and shaves off his beard in order to change his appearance. He was fast asleep drinking cheap rye whiskey while the television blares, but awakens in a hotel room cable-tied to the bed. The phone rings; it is Finch insisting his information is never wrong. Reese hears the sounds of a woman under attack nearby and quickly frees himself. Breaking into the next room, he finds Finch with a recording of a woman murdered three years earlier. Having made his point to an angry Reese, Finch promises he will never lie to him, unlike the government he left, and that he believes all Reese wants to do is protect people. Certain that Finch is not government, Reese asks who Finch is, and is told he is a "concerned third party" who can offer Reese the chance to help people who otherwise have none. Finch takes Reese to his hidden workplace, a disused library Finch bought via a bank he controls. As Reese undertakes his investigation, he and Finch establish their working model: Reese in the field and Finch on the computer continuously connected by cell phone and ear bud as each report to the other. He presses Finch for more details about where he gets his information. They walk through a park and Reese listens as Finch tells him about the Machine, his role in its development, and how it creates the relevant and irrelevant lists. With more information, and an additional identity, NYPD Detective Stills, stolen from one of the corrupt cops, he continues with the case. Once it is closed, and having enlisted the reluctant assistance of Detective Lionel Fusco, Reese commits to working with Finch. Over time, Reese and Finch come to trust one another, and then gradually became friends. Finch generally refers to Reese as Mr. Reese, using his first name only when concerned. Later, when fully funded by Finch, he opts for simple dark suits, worn first with an open-collared colored shirt, and finally with his trademark white shirt, along with a black wool topcoat in cold weather. He also wears concealable white body armor under his shirt. The nickname soon leads to Reese becoming something of an urban legend in New York. According to the legend, a tall, nicely dressed man in a suit often shows up unexpectedly and always in time to halt a violent crime from happening, saving innocents and injuring perpetrators, to varying degrees, in the process. He is intelligent, resourceful, and hyper-vigilant. His quick-thinking often helps him deal with any sticky situation. He has highly developed hand-to-hand combat techniques, and can easily take on multiple opponents at once. He maintains a small arsenal in his home, and can use a variety of handguns and assault weapons efficiently. He is also adept with a knife, and at improvising weapons from the various materials he finds at hand.

5: John P. Reese - Wikipedia

John B. Warren is John Reese's clean cover identity which he only uses under extreme circumstances. According to Finch, this identity is the one that most closely matches Reese's real past.

6: John Witherspoon - IMDb

For those here curious on what happened to John Reese. He decided to get rid of everything he owned and just travel the world out of a small backpack with his laptop and a few days worth of clothes.

7: John Reese (Person of Interest) | Speedy deletion Wiki | FANDOM powered by Wikia

Background. John Earl Reese, 16, was murdered while in a cafe with his cousins Joyce Nelson, 13, and her sister Johnnie, The murder took place in Gregg County, East Texas.

8: John H. Reese - Wikipedia

John was the one to suggest shibari to Harold, and while Harold's apprehensive, he does love the look of John all tied up. Series Part 23 of The Sinner and the Saint.

9: John Reese/John Warren | Person of Interest Wiki | FANDOM powered by Wikia

JOHN THE WHAT? JOHN REESE pdf

I recently listed my Beautiful Family home of 56 years in San Carlos with John Reese. My husband and I updated the home for 11 months and each week we would notice John walking the area meeting the neighbors and he always stopped by to see our progress.

1935 Bridal Wreath Designers Index #01 Everest, a mountaineering history Mountain Bike! San Francisco and the Bay Area White shadow Marie Brennan Eblaitica Essays on the Ebla Archives and Elaitic Language Biblical headship and the ordination of women Feeling frequencies Electrocardiology (International congress series) 3 The Voyage of the Duff Procedures for Primary Care Providers Exercises for Human Biology Aioms 2014 question paper with solution Encouraging reflective learners Disney Best Friends (My First Look Find) Petroleum and Marine Technology Information Guide Algebra for dummies cheat sheet Liszt 6 Consolations (Kalmus Edition) Forensic science an introduction textbook From the Banat to North Dakota; A History of the German-Hungarian Pioneers in Western North Dakota Heaven Can't Wait (Spellbound) The art of negotiation wheeler Feminism in The Netherlands Petra de Vries Creativity and innovation as competitive advantages : moving target? The Illusive Quality of Existence Nuffield science calculations The complete photobook. V. 3. Cross-currents in the movement for the reform of the police. Games church bosses play The Graveyard Book CD The Kids Guide to Pet Jokes, Rhymes Riddles Behavioral checklist Pt. 2. Hearings March 20-22, 1922. Seasons of Ordinary Time Over the Bounding Main 193 Collectors originality guide In Search of Willie Morris Real estate regulations Peirce, J. F. The hot tamales murder case. Principal from the Black Lagoon