Preliminary matches[ edit ] The first televised match was between Ric Flair and Carlito. Towards the end of the match, Lashley delivered a Dominator to Shane and pinned him for the win. Lashley was declared the new ECW Champion, but Vince said that since he did not pin him, the champion, Lashley did not win the title. Throughout the match, the two exchanged many aerial maneuvers. During an interview segment before the match, Orton attacked Michaels. Michaels, however, appeared and came to the ring, although he showed signs of injury. Michaels came into the match with a legitimate knee injury. Michaels followed up with a diving elbow drop and tried to execute Sweet Chin Music , but collapsed in the process. The referee declared Orton the winner as a result. After the match, Orton attacked Michaels again, causing a kayfabe career-threatening concussion. Batista controlled most of the match and performed a Spinebuster on Edge. Edge, however, pinned Batista with a school boy , retaining the title. MVP gained the first pinfall by pinning Benoit after executing a Playmaker. Khali attacked Cena early in the match, but Cena countered and gained the advantage. The referee, however, did not see this and declared Cena the winner. Cena retained the WWE Championship and gained possession of the belt, which Khali had kayfabe stolen prior to the event. Lashley won the right to face McMahon by winning a Gauntlet match with the stipulation that he would receive a title shot if he beat Chris Masters , Viscera , Umaga and Shane McMahon in succession. Edge retained his title after escaping the steel cage first. After the match, Van Dam was attacked by Orton. Following the controversial ending to their match at Judgment Day, where Cena forced Khali to submit while his foot was underneath the bottom rope, meaning Cena should have released the hold, Khali challenged Cena to a Falls Count Anywhere match for One Night Stand. Cena accepted, and Khali attacked him, performing a Chokebomb.

This Shabbat is Rosh Hashana and we shall all be called to the Heavenly Court to stand trial for our lives. It would certainly help us greatly if we understood what exactly is being weighed and judged; the sorts of considerations that influence the deliberations of the Heavenly Court; how much input we are allowed to contribute to the proceedings. We shall explore these areas of interest in this essay by developing some of the basic ideas expounded by Rabbi Dessler in his work Michtav Mieliyahu. The Talmud informs us that mitzvot cannot be rewarded in this world Kiddushin 39b. The commentators explain that the physical world simply does not have the resources to deliver the amount of joy required to compensate the performance of even a single Mitzvah. Only people who do not have the merit to make it to the World to Come are written into the Book of Life to compensate them for their past good deeds; we certainly hope that none of us are in this position. The conclusion: But if the judgment we face on Rosh Hashana does not concern reward, what exactly is being weighed? According to Rabbi Dessler, the model we should study as an aid to understanding the deliberations of the Heavenly Court on Rosh Hashana is an economic investment model; the judgments of Rosh Hashana are the heavenly equivalents of earthly investment policy decisions. On Rosh Hashana it is decided how much Divine energy God will invest in the world in general and in our own lives in particular in the course of the coming year. Each of us is sent to this world by God to develop ourselves spiritually and earn our entry to the World to Come, the place we regard as our destination where we shall receive our reward. Whoever undertakes to shut himself to spirituality, we shall provide him or her with the opportunity to carry out this design. The direction we choose to follow in our lives and the levels of intensity with which we pursue our spiritual objectives are evaluated annually. If we have made use of the inputs we were given in the previous year and progressed towards perfecting ourselves, the Heavenly court will generally decide to increase its investment in us. Our circumstances for the coming investment period, the New Year, will be arranged in a manner that ensures that we encounter the opportunities we require to progress even faster toward our goals. Through his efforts, his attachment to his studies has grown to such an extent that it has become painful and frustrating to invest any time in any other endeavor no matter how important it may be to physical survival. The Heavenly court may very well decide on Rosh Hashana that he should receive a substantial financial windfall so that he may be in the position to hire other people to assume his everyday physical burdens. But not only does the Court decide what we shall receive in the coming year on Rosh Hashana, it also decides on the manner we shall receive the things that were prescribed for us. Suppose for example that our budding scholar had purchased a cheap startup stock, Microsoft. The Court might arrange to deliver the windfall by increasing the value of Microsoft stock so rapidly, that our frustrated scholar is able to solve all his financial worries for the foreseeable future by selling his holdings. Of course, choosing this method of delivering the windfall to the scholar means that other owners of Microsoft stock will prosper as well, but that is all to the good. There is nothing the Heavenly Court enjoys more than the opportunity to distribute largess. On the other hand, if he already enjoys substantial wealth and it is the time and attention that he must devote to his business that is the major source of his distraction, it may very well be decided that the best way to give the Torah scholar more time to immerse himself totally in his studies is to bankrupt his business. A life of poverty might be far more conducive to Torah study than living with the distractions of wealth and luxury. Let us imagine that the revolving bank loan that his business needs to function is secured by his holdings of Microsoft stock. The Court might arrange a crash of the Nasdaq, so that Microsoft stock loses its value so rapidly that the banks would be forced to call in the revolving credit business loan, driving the business into bankruptcy. In fact we have stumbled upon an entirely different category of judgment. For there are people who are written into the Book of Life for themselves and there are others who are written into the book in the merit of others. Reading through the Rosh Hashana prayer book conveys the idea that the Members of the Great Assembly, the Sages who compiled these prayers over three thousand years ago, conceived of Rosh Hashana as a sort of Divine Coronation day. The Talmud refers to this phenomenon as Malchiyot, or Enthronement prayers. Our own conception of kingdom is political. A new kingdom is established, when either by popular consent or through the power of conquest, a group of people establishes hegemony over a portion of the earth and its inhabitants; the people who become the subjects of the new kingdom already belong to a particular culture or cultures. The human king does not create his kingdom. He merely reorganizes a given part of creation under his banner. The conceptual foundation of Rosh Hashana is that a created universe has no inertia; it consists entirely of Divine Energy whose input comes up for renewal annually. Each year, God in effect recreates the world by renewing and redistributing the Divine Energy of creation. This renewal of creation is referred to in our prayers as the establishment of a brand new Kingdom. The people of the world and the events in which they will be involved in the coming year are powered by Divine energy just as much as the physical environment they inhabit. The energy that keeps people alive and the energy they must expend in the course of their lives must also be renewed. God is perfectly happy with the physical universe as is, just as He brought it into being in the Six Days of Creation. When He finished creating the physical universe and all its creatures, He declared, "And God saw all that He had made and behold it was very good" Genesis 1: There is no need to tinker with what is already very good. The Heavenly Court will rearrange the world according to the dictates of the fundamental principles of Divine policy: Whoever undertakes to shut himself to spirituality, We shall provide him the opportunity to carry out his designs. Let us remember that the universe was created by a series of Divine speeches Avot 5,1. Jewish tradition maintains that God informed us about Rosh Hashana to allow us to have some input into how this new kingdom is to be fashioned. The purpose of creation is to allow man to actualize his spiritual potential. As I stand before God on Rosh Hashana, He is waiting to hear from me about what I plan to do to actualize my spiritual potential in the coming year. If all that issues from me is my desire to live on in prosperity and good health for another year, I am actually informing God that I do not require the renewal of His Kingdom at all. I am perfectly happy with the world just as it is. But God did not intend this world to be a comfortable place where I merely keep living on and on. He created the World to Come as the place of enjoyment and living the good life. The sole reason for the existence of this world is to provide man with a place in which he can work. On the other hand if I sincerely resolve to invest my energy [really the Divine energy that I am asking God to renew out of which I am fashioned] in the coming year into developing my spiritual potential, not only do I need this world to be recreated, I also need it to assume the particular shape that will maximize my ability to work efficiently, and develop as much of my potential as possible. On the first day of Rosh Hashana God only considers the cases of the people who are sincerely committed to developing themselves spiritually. It is they who offer Him investment opportunities, because it is they who require the renewal of His Kingdom. After carefully assessing the seriousness and feasibility of the proposals that are submitted, He determines the inputs that each individual whose case is being deliberated requires to actualize his ideas in the coming year, and weaves all these individual requirements into a common tapestry and recreates a world that will correspond exactly with the combined requirements. What of all the good Jews who may not be very interested in spiritual development, but who are loyal to tradition, who are excellent spouses, dedicated parents, solid reliable people. How do they fit into the new world? They are what the second day of Rosh Hashana is about. It is not difficult to explain how there could be two days of Passover or Succot. Passover celebrates the freedom from the dominance of physical circumstances. You can always use an extra dose of freedom. Succot is the season of our joy, and you certainly cannot get enough of that! But Rosh Hashana is a Day of Judgment. Who wants a second day? Moreover, the Heavenly Court does not function in the manner of its earthly counterparts. It has no backlog of cases. God can finish judging the entire world all in one day. There should be no judgment to celebrate on the second day! The cases of all the people who did not pass muster on the first day are judged on the second. After God maps out the dimensions of His new Kingdom on the first day based on the requirements of those who were judged worthy of investment, on the second day He considers all the lives that need to be renewed to make His new Kingdom function. Even if we focus only on religious requirements the new world requires a large population. The people for whom the world was recreated on the first day need synagogues in which to pray; this means that you will need a quorum of people to be written in the Book of Life even if there is only a single member who passed muster on the first day. They will need Talmudic academies in which to study; a functioning academy must have a large student body, teachers, administrators, maintenance people etc. First day people require Kosher food to eat; thousands of people can be written into the Book of Life to make sure that there is a functioning food industry. If you think about it there are literally millions of functions that must be filled in order to keep the spiritual world functioning. There are other sorts of spiritual needs that must be filled as well. Those who are working seriously on themselves are constantly being tested. In practice, a great percentage of these moral tests, if not the majority, involve interactions with other people. People provide the opportunity for the giving or withholding of charity, for testing patience, for expressions of concern and demonstrations of kindness, for the display of humility; the human character is tested constantly in every interaction with others. The lives of all these people are renewed on the second day of Rosh Hashana. The deliberations and considerations before the Heavenly Court on the second day obviously differ from those on the first. The question being considered is whether they are the best choice to fill a required social slot within the Jewish people, or whether they are necessary to keep the world functioning. Needless to say, there is a vast difference between the manner in which the world functions for those for whom it was renewed, and the way it functions for those who were allowed to live in order to keep it working smoothly. The people Hashgacha Pratis, Divine Providence. God will monitor their progress constantly throughout the year, ensure that they are protected from harm, and undergo precisely the experiences they need to bring out their potential. Their circumstances undergo daily and even hourly adjustments. In other words, there is a Divine guiding hand that is constantly rearranging the world for their benefit. Those who are inscribed in the Book of Life on the second day are placed under an altogether different sort of regime. As they inhabit a world that was renewed for others, the guiding hand of Providence is only concerned with them in terms of the function for which they were given life. Their lives are arranged in terms of the benefit their circumstances bring to others, not in terms of the things they may require to encourage their own spiritual development and growth. As they live in a world that really belongs to others, they are forced to adjust to the conditions of the lives of the people they are living to support. Nevertheless they are alive. They have free will. They can change and grow. As long as there is life there is hope and opportunity. By next Rosh Hashana these people could also become first day people. They will certainly do many good things in the course of their ordinary lives and increase their share in the World to Come. Each of them is referring to a different level of Hashgacha Pratis.

Enter ye in at the strait gate: Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so, every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. Therefore, by their fruits ye shall know them. Not every one that saith unto me: Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in Heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: And he said unto them, Strive to enter in at the strait gate: When once the master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and he shall answer and say unto you, I know you not whence ye are: Then shall ye begin to say, We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets. But he shall say, I tell you, I know you not whence ye are; depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity. There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out. All the nations will be gathered before him, and he will separate people one from another as a shepherd separates the sheep from the goats, and he will put the sheep at his right hand and the goats at the left. Then I saw a great white throne and him who was seated on it. From his presence earth and sky fled away, and no place was found for them. And I saw the dead, great and small, standing before the throne, and books were opened. Then another book was opened, which is the book of life. And the dead were judged by what was written in the books, according to what they had done. He will baptize you with the Holy Spirit and fire. His winnowing fork is in his hand, and he will clear his threshing-floor and will gather his wheat into the granary; but the chaff he will burn with unquenchable fire. The Son of Man will send his angels, and they will collect out of his kingdom all causes of sin and all evildoers, and they will throw them into the furnace of fire, where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Then the righteous will shine like the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Let anyone with ears listen! But I will warn you whom to fear: Yes, I tell you, fear him! After the Judgment, the Righteous will go to their eternal reward in Heaven and the Accursed will depart to Hell see Matthew A soul in Purgatory will always reach Heaven, but those in Hell will be there eternally. At that time, all will be resurrected. Those who were in purgatory will have already been purged, meaning they would have already been released into Heaven, and so like those in Heaven and Hell will resurrect with their bodies. These differences may only be apparent and not actual due to differing theological terminology and tradition.
