Juno was the goddess of marriage, childbirth, and a protector of women. She is the Queen of the gods. In the chart she represents the marriage we seek out or have, or the marriage partner. This also applies to long-term relationships, any relationship where commitment to one another is central. Firey, passionate, child-like or selfish in marriage. Individual that identifies with Juno. A steady, committed, comfortable marriage. Loyal, down-to-earth marriage partner. Romantic partner, sensual partner. Material security through marriage. Intellectual, social, witty marriage partner. Marriage based off of common interests, ever-changing, a marriage that helps you learn. A marriage that feels like home. Traditional values, deep emotional bond. A sensitive and caring marriage partner, partners that nurture one another. In the 4th house, desire for partner is intrinsic to the soul. A flashy marriage, a partner you can be proud of, a heart-centered marriage. Warm love, romantic, playful. Marriage partner that gives you validation. Practical marriage, intellectual marriage partner, a marriage where you can keep your autonomy. Marriage partner that serves you, helps you with chores. A partner you work with. Very relationship-oriented, finds self through marriage. Balanced and equal partnership, searching for the life partner. Romantic and wistful partner, fair partner. There may be a shadow side, secrets, room for the shadow to come out and be healed. Marriage based off of intimacy. Shared income and riches through marriage. Marriage partner from a different culture or country. Traveling together, learning together, discovering together. A marriage built on a solid and secure foundation. A practical marriage, a serious marriage. May be married to their career or meet spouse through work. Non-traditional or alternative marriage, marriage based off of common interests, weird marriage, eccentric or unique partner. Meeting your spouse through friends or a group you belong to. Married to your best friend. Marriage raised to the heavens, spiritual partnership, empathetic and compassionate partner, emotional bond, union through marriage. Healing or being healed through serious relationship. In the 12th, desire for marriage may be unconscious or hidden.

Juno, Key to Marriage, Intimacy and Partnership has 3 ratings and 0 reviews. One of the most common questions asked of astrologers is What about my love.

There is always something in them which makes them unpleasant. This relationship would be no different. Your Sun signs are not the problem, nor are any of the Astrology aspects of conjunction "0", squares "90" and or, trine "". It is the natural dynamics between you that is. With just about everyone you meet, there is a different vibe that goes on between you. And the same is true of you affecting them in some unknown fashion. What you have with this person is extraordinary on the plus side of the ledger. There appears to be a lot of potential for happiness and prosperity. There is also evidence that you as a union have the intellect to sort out problems. Following through on your agreements is where the water might get rough. But not completely unmanageable. The negative side of the ledger is also powerful. But the pluses between you have a chance to keep it in check. It takes about three years for relationships to show their true colors. The first year - is full of giggles and laughs, as you are both on your best behavior. The second year - each of you begins to notice the little things that irritate and annoy you. But you choose to say nothing about them. The third year - your comfort zones are now at a point where nothing is left back. Arguments are out in the open and hurtful words are thrown around loosely. On the other hand, if the union has within it the potential for many good things as yours does , then the positives will become more apparent and happiness will continue to persist. Your relationship needs time to grow, in order to notice the true potential. In the mean time, this is a good time for you two to enjoy life and go for the gusto. Take what you can from my warnings to set the ground rules and setup a super structure for yourselves. You will settle into a routine, both of you should try and make the routine a good one. Here are four top keys to help you add that spice and excitement back into your sex life that may have been missing for many months at the least, and many years at the worst. Asking questions When was the last time you asked your partner what they desire regarding your intimate experiences? When was the last time you sent them a text or an email especially, which are much more effective than talking in person, and asked them what they would like to do differently in regards to intimacy? In regards to sex? It amazes me when I work with couples that are very bored with their sex life, how many of them have stopped asking the most important questions that I just listed above. And why is that? Resentments get in the way of intimacy every time. Nothing, and I mean nothing will ever change. Send an email, or text to your partner today, not tomorrow, not Sunday, but today and ask them what is missing for them in their sex life with you. On your own, I want you to send an email or text to your partner telling them what you love about your intimate life. Is it the way they kiss? Is it how they hold your hand? Or how they hug you as you leave for work? Starting your communication like this is incredibly important. This type of email or text opens the door for the next part of this equation. This should always be done outside of the bedroom. Not during sex, not just after sex because we are all way too vulnerable in that period of time. I found with many couples this part of the conversation can be greatly enhanced by working with a professional. Recently, I had a chance to help a couple in California over Skype that was having extreme intimate issues. They were both bored. But they were both filled with resentment. Once we cleared the resentments out-of-the-way, and we had them both on Skype for their session, they were very open to answering the questions I gave them. This also took some of the embarrassment away from either of them having to be the leader in the conversation. Take control of the intimate experience Have you ever told your partner that you were going to take control of the intimate experience you wanted to share with them this evening? In the bedroom already set up you have candles, maybe silk or satin sheets, and soft music playing in the background. Now there are some couples that will look at the above four steps and say that they are elementary in regards to adding spice to their relationships. If the above is mild, go wild in your own way. I think the key is to realize you need help and ask for it. There are thousands of counselors and therapists like myself all around the world who are more than happy to help you reclaim the intimate excitement you had when you began your dating and or marriage experience. Today is the day to grab your partner by the hand and the heart! And lead them to A path of deeper intimacy and connection.

Your astrological chart can actually show you what qualities in a mate are best for you -- beyond just examining Venus and Mars. The Juno asteroid is one key to success in a long-term relationship. Understanding what this heavenly body really says about you or another is vital to striking the right combination for lasting love. Juno, a Roman goddess, was the wife and sister! She was the initiator of women into the rites of marriage. Juno was honored for her loyalty and beauty and was an example of the ideal wife. The month of June -- when many weddings take place -- is named in connection with the goddess Juno. Juno in the astrological chart describes your style of relating, compatibility, and intimacy needs, specifically in the context of a primary relationship or marriage. Her energy is applicable for men or women. Venus describes how you show love and what type of energy you need to feel validated. For men, Venus may show the feminine qualities you find attractive. Mars is the key to our sexual expression, and often, for women, shows the type of male qualities to which you are drawn. Both planets reveal, in terms of relationships, who you are likely to be attracted to, and what you are likely to find in dating situations. They signify the above qualities regardless of sexual orientation. This is where Juno enters the story. Consider my client, Julia. She had been married for six years to a man she was passionately attracted to. They had powerful connections between her Mars and his Venus. But beyond the passion, she felt completely un nourished by her husband. After their divorce, she dated for a time and had another three-year relationship to a man who was very different in personality, but the pattern was the same -- there was passion but no real connection. Julia ended the union and was now involved with a new man, but the pattern was emerging again. Julia knew from her chart that she had Venus in Scorpio and Mars in Aries. If you need a chart, try Cafe Astrology for a free one. Scroll down the chart results page to see Juno. This is a strong sexual placement and led to her attracting strong, masculine men with whom the sex was always great. But her Juno was in Cancer. This revealed that she needed a mate who was emotionally nurturing, interested in home and family, and a bit softer than the men she was currently attracting. She had to look past her immediate sexual attractions to the super-masculine type of guy and be open to seeing a different sort of man. Cathy was another client who was in a fairly good marriage of 10 years. But things were getting a little stale, and she wanted to know how she might deepen her connection with her husband. She had never looked at her Juno, which was in Sagittarius. I explained to her that to be satisfied in marriage, her Juno needed adventure! Perfect for both of them! Combining Astrology With Psychic Readings There are many ways to use the wisdom that is present in your astrological chart. Once you have the key from Juno about your deepest relationship needs, it allows you to be more clear and focused in your search for a mate -- or connecting to the mate you already have. When we consider the Juno information, it is much easier to focus on the person that is most appropriate, and zoom in on how to invite that relationship energy in. When a client is clear about his or her needs, we can work together in the psychic realm to attract the mate he or she wants. The more tools we have, the more empowered we can be. Juno is a graceful goddess who wants us all to be successful in our relating. Her wisdom is present for us at all times -- right in our astrological charts. Keen is for entertainment purposes only. Learn how Juno transiting your 7th house can mean that you are now ready to share your life (and therefore, are more likely to meet someone), while Juno transiting your 1st house can point to a need for more freedom in your relationships.

When we sense our link to those that we love, we feel the full joy of being a valued human who holds an important place in the world. This feeling of connection is an integral part of our well-being. It reminds us that our lives have meaning, it protects us from loneliness, and proves to us that we are all part of the family of mankind. Connecting emotionally is an essential part of the falling-in-love process, and one that often happens naturally as you spend time with your partner discovering them and how they perceive the world around them. As you share your views, you weave this emotional connection which is one of the guy-wires that keeps your love relationship grounded, and keeps it from flying away even in times of disagreement and other less-than-happy moments that happen to all marriages. But what if you are having trouble connecting emotionally to your partner? You know you are in love, and you want make sure this love stays strong. You know that an emotional connection is just as important as a physical one. What are some of the ways you can make sure you are doing everything you can to plant, nourish and tend to your emotional connection with your spouse so that it blooms and takes root in order to help you through the rough patches that may occur during your life together? Bond in the healthiest way possible An emotional connection starts with a bond, and that bond needs to be constructed in a healthy way. Here are some of the components that make up healthy emotional connections: Emotionally connected couples practice empathy not only with this spouses, but with all of the people whose paths they cross each day: Listen actively Active listening connects you emotionally to your partner as it shows them you are fully engaged in the conversation. To listen actively, allow your partner to talk. Then repeat what you have heard, using your own words. A conversation about household chores might look something like this: How would you like us to divide the kitchen cleaning work up? These are merely filler words and do not indicate that you are really taking part in the conversation in a mindful way. You may be used to hearing these brief responses when you talk with a teenager! Making large, life-impacting decisions? Build consensus together Even if one of you is the breadwinner in the family, deciding how to spend that money should be a joint decision. Power is equal in the marriage Emotionally connected couples have a balance of power and they view each other as equals. Each voice carries equal weight in the household. Obstacles to emotional connection There are some ways of relating to others that stand in the way of building an emotional connection, but all of these can be surmounted with some dedicated effort, provided perhaps by an outside person such as a therapist. In these cases, it is vital that the couple work together to overcome these obstacles. A relationship lacking in emotional connection is more like a partnership, and that is not what most people seek when they fall in love. Once you acquire the skills to build emotional connection, you will find that your ability to connect with all around you becomes easy, natural, and extremely satisfying. One positive takeaway is the sense of belonging that you will feel; that sensation of inclusion that buoys you and reminds you that you are not alone as you move through the world. And this is the real purpose of marriage:

Are You Lonely in a Partnership or Marriage? Oh, if I could list all of my highly not-always-adorable idiosyncrasies! And, okay, I might have a slightly unfair advantage: How can I be lonely when my spouse is right there; I can literally see him, smell him, and we totally just paid all the bills together without even arguing or snapping at one another success! Unfortunately, you can be lonely in your marriage. Although no two happy marriages are identical, every lonely marriage shares one thing in common: Emotional abandonment can be a bit confusing. Something isâ€”how do you put it? In fact, many couples who are feeling disconnected throw the majority of their energy into their kids. You know, as a distraction from the real pain; the real problems; the real and nagging ache that comes from knowing something isâ€”how do you put it? It more likely means the emotional distance between the two of you has expanded to such a point that your love is lacking an essential intimacyâ€”a tenderness of words, actions, and thoughts. A type of gentleness you know is possible in your two-ness because remember?! And, good news warning here: Because most relationships in which emotional distance and loneliness have taken up residence can, indeed, be shifted. They can â€” yes, yes, yes they can! You can, with a little work and sometimes just a few very small tweaks in your own behavior yes, change starts with you , come back to a daily reality which looks more like this: Yes, you can get back to that marriage! And do you need to find a therapist to reclaim said goals marriage? As you make the decision to reclaim a connection with your spouse, resolve first to be patient. And muscle memory is a powerful thing, as is the intimacy muscle. Here are three simple tips as you begin your new reconnection exercise routine: The simple answer to where you begin? And, then, really want to listen. Re-establishing emotional connection is a shift in energyâ€”a shift in wanting to know what each of you are thinking and feeling again. Make it your goal to engage your partner in more of these conversations each day. Most likely they will begin reciprocating, asking you similar questions. It might not happen right away old habits areâ€”you know! But trust that over time it will. Humans are pretty predictable; we tend to give back precisely what we are given. Meaning, into their thought-world. Yes, this can happen by asking questions see point one. From her vantage point. What is daily life likeâ€”from their angle? Come into these few minutes of perspective-taking with a generosity of heart and mind, an activity that will kind of magically give you more empathy and patience as you talk to and navigate daily life with your partner. Choose to create tiny moments during which you gently and intentionally share experiences again. How to find one? I like to begin by asking a colleague or pal for referrals. Also, did you know that seeing a MFT is covered by most health insurance plans? Encourage them to think therapy simply as educationâ€”a simple opportunity to learn new ways of being together! If you have kids, harness their desire to raise thriving littlesâ€”reminding your spouse that the single most important thing you can do for your children is to have a healthy relationship yourselves. Yes, they are watching. And yes, you can reclaim intimacy again! Just keep reminding yourself:

Pinterest What is Juno? Miyuki Sugimoto Astrologically speaking, besides the ten planets, there are five major asteroids that help us deepen our understanding of ourselves: Ceres, Pallas, Juno, Vesta and Lilith. These asteroids orbit the Sun in a belt located between Mars and Jupiter. Juno, discovered on September 1, by Karl L. Harding was named in the Roman tradition after the wife of Jupiter. What is Juno in the birth chart? Juno represents marriage and partnerships and our attitudes toward commitment and equality in relationships. Being the partner of a rather philandering god, Juno also tells us how to work with the shadow side of relationships like domestic abuse, inequality, possessiveness and jealousy. Have you experienced that familiar feeling of jealousy? Does jealousy have any up side? When is it okay to feel jealous? These are questions we can ask Juno. And Juno can help us understand our jealousy triggers. Jealousy is different than envy—envy is when we want what someone else has, and jealousy is when we fear losing what we already have. In my chart, for example, Juno is in Libra. Libra is a social sign with a focus on balance: I am often socially competitive, expect people to behave in a certain manner, and am jealously triggered when someone tips the collective attention their way, especially my partner. Juno in Libra cautions me to work with a partner with similar social values and who is willing to become a social team rather than a competitor. Juno through the signs helps us locate our insecurities, so that we can work to overcome them and become proud of our passions, our needs, and our strong feelings. Juno reminds us that when we feel jealous we are giving our power over to something or someone else. Our jealousy reminds us to return to the self, to adjust and rediscover our unique powers. Our jealousies may even teach us about our boundaries. And Juno is capable of great feats of forgiveness. She would ask us to consider our jealous tendencies, and bless us with strength to move through these intense emotions, anointing us as a tribe of initiated souls who dare to feel strongly. She would have us recognize jealousy as part of partnership, and encourage us to talk about it, work with it, understand it, and most importantly understand its place within the soul. Where is Juno in your chart? Please include your birth information: What is Juno in Aries My jealousy is triggered in partnerships when I lose sight of my own strength, confidence and natural juicy warrior-ness. I like my partner to exhibit a level of self-sufficiency and self-confidence. I will not diminish myself for a partner. What is Juno in Taurus My jealousy is triggered in partnerships when I lose sight of my self worth. I will not let others dictate my worth. I revel in a partner who reflects my value back to me through genuine love, romance and gorgeous adoration. What is Juno in Gemini My jealousy is triggered in partnerships when I lose sight of my need to communicate and my natural curiosity. I like my partner to feel curious about me, asking questions that get to the heart of my superbly interesting story. What is Juno in Cancer My jealousy is triggered in partnerships when I lose sight of a sense of belonging and overall ability to care and be cared for. I desire a partner who views me as their tribe every single day. What is Juno in Leo My jealousy is triggered in partnerships when I lose sight of my authentic, creative self. I am meant to shine. What is Juno in Virgo My jealousy is triggered in partnerships when I lose sight of my ability to discern the truth. When things get messy I have the power to organize. I seek a partner who speaks as they mean and will follow through on promises. What is Juno in Libra My jealousy is triggered in partnerships when I lose sight of symmetry, beauty and balance. I value social grace. I crave a partner who values social dexterity and balance and walks into a room with me as my equal. What is Juno in Scorpio My jealousy is triggered in partnerships when I lose sight of intimacy and my need for erotic pleasure. I pine for a partner who can keep up with me sexually as well as render themselves vulnerable at all the right times. What is Juno in Sagittarius My jealousy is triggered in partnerships when I lose sight of my freedom and strong voice. I wish for a partner who speaks directly and with confidence, who dares speak for the truth and can march passionately and actively with me. What is Juno in Capricorn My jealousy is triggered in partnerships when I lose sight of my inner authority. I need a partner who understands my ambition and thirst for success and encourages me to move toward my extraordinary dreams. What is Juno in Aquarius My jealousy is
