He was born in New Zealand on 26 October , but moved to Australia during his childhood. He got his start in the music industry in Australia, but he broke into superstardom after his move to America. Keith Urban began his musical endeavors at an early age entering in local competitions and Country Musical Festivals when he was only He grew up idolizing Dire Straits guitarist Mark Knopfler and Lindsay Buckingham from Fleetwood Mac fame and began closely modeling his style after these influences. For the next couple of years Urban made consistent appearances on several Australian Country TV programs and went on to win the golden guitar award at the Tamworth Country Music Festival with collaborator Jenny Wilson. Apart from pursuing a solo career Urban was involved in writing songs for other musicians as well as backing them on tour. Urban toured alongside legendary Australian Country musician Slim Dusty as a backup guitarist. During this period he also contributed backing vocals to a live INXS album. Urban contributed lead vocals, guitar, ganjo, and keyboards on their one and only self-titled release. Despite the groups short lived career two singles from the album appeared on the country charts. Around this period Urban became an ardent user of cocaine, which subsequently led him into rehab. Once Urban became drug-free his career received a significant jumpstart and with the release of his self-titled American debut he reached number on the U. In addition to his music career Urban has acted as a judge on the Australian version of The Voice and replaced Steven Tyler as a judge for American Idol. Live reviews Keith Urban I could sit here in front of my laptop and tell you how amazing Keith Urban is. It was crazy how many times we listened to it. The irony that my dad actually had a hole in his jeans was bittersweet. Song after song Keith would sing, without flaw - I did not want to leave. Through his music, the crowd illuminated singing along, and you could tell that as his voice diffused through the crowd, everyone instantly became overjoyed with a flood of honesty and love. Love for the music, love for those around them to share it with, and love for the privilege to be there and have a good time. He never fails to amaze us, entertain us, and show us the passion he has for his music. The smooth fluidity his voice obtains has the ability to move some to tears and smile for years. When you combine his talent on the guitar, piano, drums, keyboard, sitar, bass guitar, or ganjo with his voice, magic is born. His music is infectious. And for that, I applaud Keith Urban, not only to thank him for the grace he shows us, but also for the wondrous music he shares with us.

Keith is a lone wolf, which has suited him perfectly well for the last three years. But the fate has other ideas. Currently I have no idea how long this will be or how many chapters. Thanks for reading xoxo See the end of the work for more notes. Predators Chapter Text Keith woke with a sudden start. Sweat gleamed on his skin and his chest rose and fell rapidly. He raised one trembling hand and pushed his fingers through his bangs, which were plastered to his forehead. He lay quiet, the soft hum of the box fan in the corner the only other sound in the small bedroom. Keith exhaled and slowly sat up. He pushed off the blankets and swung his legs over the side of the bed. At the head of his bed was a window, and even though the curtains were heavy and pulled closed, the sunlight was still shining through the fabric. It was Saturday, and when Keith checked the time on his cell phone saw that it was only eighty-thirty in the morning. He knew he should sleep for another couple hours, he had worked late last night, but after that nightmare With a quiet sigh Keith finally stood. He stretched until his spine popped, then crossed the small bedroom. His first stop was the bathroom and when done, the kitchen to start the coffee. As the coffee brewed Keith went around his apartment, opening curtains to let in the sun and windows to let in the morning air before the afternoon heat set in. The sound of traffic from the busy street below filled his apartment along with all the smells that clung to a city the size of Aris. He was just walking into the kitchen, hearing that the coffee maker was now quiet, when there was a knock at his door. Keith bristled in irritation as he crossed to the door. Before opening it the smell of magic, peppery and heavy, tickled his nose. He sighed and swung the door open. Her brown hair was messy around her head and she wore glasses that were too big for her face. Keith blinked at the bag of bagels and container of cream cheese, clearly straight from the refrigerator. She poured them both coffee and set the bagels and cream cheese on the island before hopping onto one of the kitchen stools. Keith smirked and took the other seat. Maybe I worked out this morning. He looked at the calendar that hung in the kitchen. Saturday was marked by a thick black circle. He cleaned out the coffee pot, disposed of the grounds, and cleaned up the plates and silverware used for their breakfast. Every month when the full moon was on the horizon it came up. Some bigger than others. The last thing Keith needed was to join a pack that ended up being abusive or controlling, and then not being able to get out of it. Instead he went to his bedroom, pulled his sweatpants, socks, and sneakers, and left the apartment. The moon was that night and his blood was starting to heat up and his skin itch. His body knew what was going to happen that night, and the wolf inside him was starting to wake up and stir. Doubtful, but exercise was exercise. The park Keith frequented was just across the street from his apartment. It was small and poorly taken care of, but during the day it was always filled with the laughter of children and people jogging or walking their dogs. Keith liked the park because it was small, by werewolf standards, which meant he was the only one that frequented it. It had a long walking trail, tall trees, a small pond that was always filled with ducks, a playground and was surrounded by a tall cast-iron fence that had been long over-grown. With the fence and the trees the park was very private, another reason why Keith liked it. When he was a wolf, he could be here all night and not see another soul and no one would see him. The only other people here was a pretzel vendor on the corner just outside the park and a couple other joggers. After taking a few minutes to stretch, Keith broke into a run. He ran until he was sweaty, until the sun was higher in the sky, until his legs were burning. But he still felt Like his skin was too tight, like there was something moving just inside bones. And, Keith supposed, there was. There was a monster inside him and tonight it would come out. Finally he stopped running. The bagel he had had earlier had definitely not sated his appetite. He needed to take in a lot of food to keep his werewolf body going. It took an insane amount of calories to keep a wolf satisfied during the full moon, which was why a lot of werewolves snapped after they changed and went on a murder spree, their desire to eat more powerful than their sense of self. He would not go through that again. He had shoved a couple bills in his sock before jogging and he pulled it out now. He mulled over his cash as he walked to the corner store. What did he have at home? Some raw potatoes, frozen vegetables in the freezer, various noodles in the pantry, some wheat bread, cheese, frozen chicken. When he reached the store there was a huge sign hanging in the window: He could go for a good steak. The bloodier, the better, the wolf inside him echoed. When he stepped into the store he immediately noticed two things. One, that he owed Pidge an apology and what better way to do than with a steak also, she had a mini grill on her balcony and he wanted to use it, and two, there was another werewolf in here. He stiffened, the fine hairs on the back of his neck standing up on edge as he casually grabbed a shopping basket and stepped down the closest aisle. He could have turned and left the store, but Keith was never one to run with his tail between his legs. Instead he worked his way around the small store, stopping to pick out some fresh produce and brownies that would Pidge would like, before turning to the meat counter-- A strong shoulder caught him, knocking him off balance. For a second he stumbled, nearly dropping the shopping basket. Strong hands fumbled, grabbing him by the arm. He had black hair that was buzzed in the back, and unusual bangs that were a shock of white. All he knew that there were alarms going off in his head and a warmth spreading throughout him. He felt his face redden for an entirely different reason. He turned quickly on his heel, his brain momentarily scrambled, before giving it a shake. He stomped to the meat counter, pointing out two. Once the steaks were wrapped he placed them in his basket. There was still another werewolf in here, the scent was always just so, which meant either they were avoiding each other or--he was being stalked. Keith stopped halfway down the canned food aisle. He was so close to the register, to the door, to being on his way home, but now he was getting pissed off. He stood and waited, turning just slightly when he saw someone approaching him. Sendak was big and strong, but that was about it. He was a bully through-and-through, a packless alpha wolf who revelled in fighting and torturing others. Keith had been afraid of him then, now he knew better. He had a dark tan and shaved head. Last time he checked the man was homeless, and just stayed in the homes of packs he was currently assaulting. Sendak bared his teeth. There was a thick scar over his left eye and the vision there had never fully recovered. Even as a wolf his face was scarred and vision off. He stood over the smaller man. And another shock was that standing next to Sendak, they were pretty evenly sized. But while Sendak gave off nothing but dangerous vibes, this guy seemed Keith stepped forward and elbowed his way past Sendak. Only when they reached the end of the aisle did Keith see Sendak stomping out of the store. He let the stranger go and whirled around at him. And you should--watch yourself on your way home. Keith tilted his head, staring up at Shiro. If he did, he would have known to stay out of their confrontation. No human was stupid enough to get between two werewolves. Without another word he turned, heading toward the check-out counter. Quickly he paid for his items, sacked them, and headed out the door without looking back.

Keith Olbermann has been on fire this election season over at GQ, but this may be the best video he's done yet. In this one, he admits to dating Laura Ingraham back in the day, and how she whispered the names of her co-conspirators in his ear one night. They won't surprise you. David Bossie. Matt.

He has Galran heritage rooted in the Galra rebel faction called the Blade of Marmora , which he decides to join, leaving Team Voltron so that " Shiro " can return as the Black Paladin. Contents Appearance Add an image Keith has the appearance a lean older teenager with pale skin, black hair, fairly thick eyebrows, and blue-gray eyes that seem purple in certain lighting. The rest of his hair reaches the base of his neck, wildly flaring out in curved strands that tend to sit on top of his coat collar or armor. He has two strands of hair that sprout from the top of his head. Of the Paladins, Keith is the second-shortest, beating only Pidge in height, until he ages in the Quantum Abyss and becomes the third-tallest alongside Lance. When he is not in his Paladin armor, Keith wears a dark blue-gray t-shirt underneath a red, white, and yellow jacket cropped to his ribcage, with the large cuffs of the jacket rolled up to expose their white color. The collar of the jacket stands propped upright. Keith wears black pants that his shirt overlaps; his boots are white with black and red accents. His black gloves are fingerless and expose part of his hand before strapping together over the wrist. At his waist, Keith wears a brown utility belt with a silver rectangular buckle in the center and two lighter brown pouches at either hip. Strapped to the belt at his lower back is a silver-colored and double-bladed knife with a black pommel, often kept wrapped in cloth and sheathed in a gray and silver scabbard. The blade is inscribed with a glowing emblem of the Blade of Marmora on its guard. While Keith normally appears to be completely human, he has been shown to display Galran traits such as yellow sclerae, feline pupils, and sharpened teeth during moments of extreme stress and emotion. Its pilot needs to be someone who relies more on instincts than skill alone. He is a competitive and pragmatic person who favors following his instincts above all else and will take initiative regardless of the danger and challenge, which can lead to impressive accomplishments. He is not overtly confident, but is aware of his skills and strengths to have trust in them and will ask others to do the same. He is not fond of the idea of abandoning a teammate, even if he considers it thinking as a Paladin to weigh the greater good over a single life. Though desperate to know the truth about himself, he willingly puts his selfish desires aside to fulfill his duty as a Paladin. Following his brief experience as leader piloting the Black Lion , his decision to leave Team Voltron only occurs so that " Shiro " may return as the Black Paladin , as Keith constantly compares himself to Shiro , who guided him in his youth, and feels the man is a better leader than himself. It is only after meeting his mother, Krolia , and bonding with her for two years that Keith stabilizes and matures as a person, returning to the mantle of Black Paladin once " Shiro ", truly a clone, turns against the team. It is clear that Keith has an immense sense of justice, selflessness, and the desire to fight alongside his team to bring light to the darkest time of the universe despite what costs may come. Bayard Takes the form of a long katar. Paladin Armor Armor that allows for safe travel in space; it contains a highly advanced computer system, communication system, a laser gun, a grappling hook and tether, holographic capabilities, an energy shield for defense, breathable air, and a jetpack for brief sustained flight. Marmora Armor Armor specialized for the Blade of Marmora that allows safe travel in space; it contains a highly advanced computer system, communication system, an identity-concealing helmet that can disappear and reappear at will, and breathable air.

Early life[edit] The son of a dirt farmer, [6] Jackson was born in Roopville, Georgia and grew up on a farm outside Carrollton , near the Alabama state line. He briefly worked college basketball with Dick Vitale. In , Jackson became the first American sports announcer to broadcast an event from the Soviet Union , a crew race between the Washington Huskies and a Soviet team. In , however, Gifford landed the job. Jackson found out that he had been taken off the Monday Night package from 38 messages, not from Rooney Arledge himself. This incident led to some contention between Jackson and the brass at ABC. He was paired with Lynn Swann and Tim Brant. Olympic Games[edit] Jackson was involved in the ABC coverage of the Summer Olympics and continued to contribute even when an attack by Palestinian terrorists transformed the coverage from that of a typical sporting event to a greater international and historical news event. He covered speed-skating during the Winter Olympics featuring Eric Heiden. He was offered the position of play-by-play for hockey , but turned it down the position ultimately went to Al Michaels. Jackson called speed skating and ski jumping at the Winter Olympics. He covered basketball in That turned out to be the final Major League Baseball game that Jackson would broadcast. He also called various Monday Night Baseball and other regular-season games for ABC throughout the late s and early s. Thus, Bob Uecker filled-in for Jackson for Game 1. In the meantime, Drysdale filled-in for Jackson on play-by-play for the early innings. This partnership lasted until He genuinely enjoyed the sport and the purity of it. His quirky expressions such as "Whoa, Nellie! Though he greatly popularized it, Jackson notes that he learned the term "Whoa, Nellie" from earlier television announcer Dick Lane. The , fans turned toward the press box, stood up and cheered for the commentator. As a part of the halftime event former Michigan coach Bo Schembechler presented Jackson with a jersey with "The Big House" across the front and a Michigan football helmet. He had a 3-month "retirement" until new ABC Sports President Dennis Swanson personally offered him a 3-year contract, which he accepted. This video played before every home game at Memorial Stadium in the season. On September 26, , for the th consecutive sellout of Memorial Stadium, Jackson again provided a video tribute to the fans of Nebraska. The name stuck, and a permanent plaque was put up next to the restroom door that reads "The Keith Jackson Toilet Facility - Dedicated Sept 11, ". UCLA football game , declared it many years later to be the greatest game he has ever seen. No replay of the actual incident was available in the booth during the telecast, as the television crew was working with limited replay capability. He concluded the program by stating "Tennessee 23, Florida State And so it is done. I say goodbye to all of you. God bless and good night. Two notable exceptions were the Michigan-Ohio State and the Oklahoma vs. Each was the th meeting between the two archrivals. He strongly hinted that he was interested in retiring for good after the season , telling The New York Times that he was feeling his age after 53 seasons and had become upset at the increased number of mistakes in his play calling in the last few years. The series was presented countdown style, and the top Big Ten student athlete was revealed during a program broadcast during the Big Ten Basketball Tournament. He has also appeared in and narrated several sports documentaries. He once parodied his broadcast persona for a Bud Light beer commercial, in which he played the officiating minister at a wedding, finishing with his famous line, "Whoa, Nellie! Jackson appeared in "The Legend of Gatorade " ads, which he humorously alluded to during his live coverage of the Rose Bowl. This film told the story of the initial seasons of Monday Night Football. Earliest surviving film of a Keith Jackson broadcast college football game between Washington State and Stanford University.
