However, this juncture has presented English departments with a clear opportunity to assert some important, positive principles. Assessment and target-points need therefore to be well-spaced to be meaningful; it is not useful to assess or to set targets for overall attainment at half termly or even termly intervals. Levels, of course, were never originally intended to be used except at the very end of a key stage. Perhaps a more meaningful approach in English might be to make a summative assessment of progress only at the end of each year. In between, teachers might use RAG ratings to indicate whether a student is broadly on track to meet a yearly target. Assessment of progress should be holistic, not by snap-shot tests or single pieces of work. In English, single pieces of work or tests are of limited use in tracking progress, as they cannot give a holistic overview of attainment. The former can only really increase; the latter might go up and down. It is important to be clear about what sort of progress is being tracked. A more sensible approach is to make a provisional assessment by looking at broad evidence, including spoken and written work over some time. Importantly, teachers should look at what students can do not just on their own, but when they are being taught well. Read something difficult with them. Give them strong stimulus. Ask them challenging questions. Model at a high level. Make them edit and redraft. Then see what they can do. Extended writing needs to be at the core of Key Stage 3. The primacy of terminal exams at GCSE should not diminish the importance at Key Stage 3 of sustained, edited and redrafted writing, through which so much can be assessed and which is so important for learning. Ironically, the demise of controlled assessments at GCSE now allows departments to increase, rather than to decrease, the time which students spend on editing and redrafting, their writing nourished by formative feedback and developed by reworking. There is an opportunity here for departments to re-assert the importance of other kinds of response – imaginative, empathetic, dramatic, transformative and so on. A quick survey of some of the approaches being adopted: APP grids might be used to assess individual pieces of work, and to record evidence of progress. An opportunity to think in a fresh way about attainment can be aligned to what students are actually learning. Disadvantages: Grids of descriptors are developed to describe how embedded each skill or aspect of knowledge is.

Attend the free assessment Every child takes a free assessment paper which gives us an indication of their ability. Our team will then provide feedback to you as a parent informing you of our expectations and how we hope to develop your child. The assessment day is also a great opportunity for you to come and see our facilities And meet the team. Here are some frequently asked questions. Classes across all three centers are taught on Saturdays. We also offer Sunday classes in our Erdington center. Please contact us for specific timings for the classes of your choice. What exam boards do you cover? We pride ourselves on being able to develop students regardless of the exam they are studying for. What are class sizes? Class sizes are no greater than 10 children per class. This enables us to focus on each child as an individual and ensure they receive a level of attention that is far beyond the school setting. What is the process of joining? The first stage of the enrolment process is to call us and speak to one of the team. This will allow us to answer any further questions you may have. We will then book your child in for an assessment. Once the assessment has been completed, we will provide feedback and expectations we have for your child in particular. Finally, you can sign our Admission form and your child can then begin from the next week. All of our teaching staff are fully qualified teachers who have years of experience in their subject material. They are all currently teachers, which means they have the most up-to-date knowledge of the curriculum they are teaching. Unlike other centers, we do not employ undergraduate teachers or even trainee teachers. This provides total piece of mind that your child is being taught by an expert. Payments How much does it cost? Please contact us to discuss prices in detail. There may be discounts available for multiple children from the same family. What is the payment schedule? Payments are made one month in the advance and are paid one month at a time. This means you pay for the entire month on the first Saturday of that month. For example, if the first session is in January, you would pay for the month of January on the first session. Further Questions Do you set homework? Every week, the teacher will set homework which will be relevant to the class material. In general, brighter pupils may be set additional homework to really help them develop. Are the centers safe? Every center is a purpose-built educational establishment that has all of the relevant health and safety policies in place. Students will also be supervised while they are in our care. Here is some feedback from parents who have trusted us with their childrenâ€¦ I spoke with the curriculum director who was extremely helpful and answered all of my questions. My son is in the 11 plus group and has really come on leaps and bounds. Most of the other tutoring centers i spoke to had undergraduates teaching. This concerned me due to their lack of experience and understanding. I was also worried about the halls they were teaching in. However with Achieving Success i was so relieved that all teachers are fully qualified and the facilities are amazing! She enjoys the small class sizes and enjoys going to the center every Saturday. In fact, having sent my 13 year old to several other centers, i can safely say Achieving Success stand head and shoulders above the others. All of our tutoring programs are completely bespoke and taught in the latest classrooms by experts, allowing your child to reach their maximum potential. Fully Qualified Teachers All of our teachers are fully qualified and have been teaching at either primary or secondary level. They have years of experience and are fully equipped to execute the teaching pedagogy required to meet the demands of the new national curriculum. Latest Facilities Unlike other centers, we work with established schools. This means your child will study in purpose-built classrooms with the best facilities. Schools trust us because they recognise the quality of the service that we offer. Bespoke Material We tailor our syllabus in keeping with government changes each year. Everything is designed to allow your child to perform at their best and give them the perfect opportunity to make maximum progress. Each syllabus perfectly prepares your child as they progress. Safe And Secure We know how important safety and security are. All centers are built to the highest government standards and have the necessary fire exits and first aiders onsite. All centers have onsite parking. Fully qualified teachers in purpose-built educational facilities allow your child to maximise their potential.
