die Raumfähre - the space shuttle / Image by NASA via Pixabay. Six weeks ago I was looking for someone who didn't speak any German and hasn't taken any classes so far to prove the concept of Smarter German, which claims to teach German in just 30 days to English speaking learners.

How much German can you learn in 30 days while learning 5 other languages? Did I stick to my schedule? Did I still learn something? Half the battle is showing up when you can as much as you can. In 30 days, I learned the top words in German using Memrise. Take a look at all those pretty check marks. Any good language learner worth their weight in language books knows that Memrise is by far the best gamified system for learning vocabulary. Why not get a head start? That was my idea behind learning the most common words in German. According to language learner, Oli at 4 Steps to Fluency: It seems obvious to me that if you want to call yourself fluent or close to it, you need to have a good command of at least words and at best If you want to dive into technical research performed by Brigham Young University, have at it. What were my results after 30 days of using Memrise to learn German? That goes to show how inconsistent I was in using Memrise. I can admit over the course of 30 days I used Memrise maybe 10 to 12 of those days. Even typing that feels generous. If I practiced for 10 minutes a day for 10 to 12 days, that only adds up to a maximum of 2 hours over 30 days focusing on vocabulary. Here are the screenshots of my review sessions on Memrise: Why do I say that? I say that because my practice was so sporadic and inconsistent that these words had to be in my long-term memory for me to recall them. How effective is Memrise for learning German? Well, that depends on what you mean by effective. Did Memrise help me to learn some common words in German? To test this theory I visited Die Zeit , a leading German newspaper, and read one of their current articles. I highlighted the words and phrases I can understand based on my Memrise practice: These words normally include I, me, you, the, it, in, with, for, also, etc. Something is better than nothing. We all start somewhere. Has it improved my speaking or listening ability? Over the course of 30 days, I flooded myself with Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese audio. To judge how Memrise affected my listening comprehension would be naive. Recognizing and knowing a word are two different things. In 30 days, I completed Chapters on Mango Languages. What more can language learners ask for? I decided to work with Mango Languages because I believe the best way to learn a language is to break the speaking barrier as soon as possible. To do so, I turned to Mango. What were my results after 30 days of using Mango Languages to learn German? Mango says I now am able to: Make small talk with strangers Greet people.

2: How to Learn German in 30 Days

I have taught German long enough to know that in 30 days you can learn various phrases and questions and understand simple responses, enough that as a tourist you can ask for help and understand the replies.

This is a free email course but please note that the main purpose of this email course is not to provide you with lessons but to show you great learning techniques 7 rules and a special method rule No 7 that will help you to learn to speak German fluently very quickly in months instead of years. So in order to get the most out of my email course, you need to read every bit of my emails and click every link which will lead you to more tips and sample lessons. Basic Online Audio Lessons Have fun with my basic online lessons on this website. Read the instructions and then click the play button. Check out the drop down boxes for more lessons. You will learn the foreign language very naturally and you will learn to think in German step by step. I created a lot of lessons and stories that will help you to get fluent very fast in months instead of years. If you want to learn more read on: How do I learn German as a beginner or as an advanced student? The answer is easy, with a method called TPRS. This method helps beginners but also advanced students. They use the same method but they focus on different things. If you are a beginner you should focus at first on: You will learn these things automatically and with fun if you read and listen to the sample lessons that you will receive with my email course. Repeat all lessons many times. Repetition is the key to save new information in your long term memory. Intermediate and advanced students: You already have a basic understanding of the German language. Now it is time to enable your brain to think in German. Being able to think in German is what you need if you want to speak German fluently. Sign up to my email course and focus in every lesson and audio story on the question and answer part. Your progress will be huge. If you have been learning a second language for some time, then you already know that learning can be very boring and exhausting and grammar is always the most boring part. And I bet you have heard that German grammar can be a little tricky and that German is not the easiest language to learn. Well, have you ever learned something very quickly in your life? Actually this is the answer to the question: How do I learn German fast? How is it possible to learn German easily and effortlessly? The answer is very simple: You have to have fun! But let me explain this method a little: As the name suggests, there is always a story involved. This sounds very trivial, right? But think about it for just one second. Maybe you already know that when you listen to something many times, you can remember it more easily. If you get a funny or interesting story, you would probably have no problem to repeat it more than one time repetition is very important. With every repetition you will deepen what you have learned. You will get to know many new words because you always get the English translation as well. But this is not all. You also need to know how to pronounce the German words. You will hear a native speaker tell the story and ask the questions. Now you are able to learn new words and the correct pronunciation. I will ask questions about the story but in a very special way. If you have listened to the story, you learned all necessary German words to answer the questions. Actually the questions are created in a way that you just need to change the word order of the question a little to answer it correctly. And the most important thing is that you are actively involved. By answering questions your brain is active and will absorb the information just like that. It is the most effective way to learn new things. If you just repeat sentences like in many language courses your brain is passive and will soon forget all new words. What shall I tell you more? I think the best way for you is to try it. After all, my German lessons on this website are free and if you sign up to my email course I will teach you the TPRS method in detail. There are 7 rules and if you follow these rules and use my storytelling method you will speak German fluently in a very short time.

In Ed Dale's case the aim was to make $ on-line by the end of 30 Days, but German language teacher and translator Angelika Davey took a different tack last year when she challenged us to learn German in just 30 Days, with her help.

Whenever you browse for language courses on the Internet you will find grandiose claims of learning a language in 1, 2, 7, 10, 30, or 90 days. Is there some truth behind that? Can you really learn a language that fast or do most advertisers just sell snake oil? What does it mean to learn a language? Here we present five possible definitions of what it means to learn a language – of course you are free to break it further down. I bought a language book or listened to a radio or TV program and picked up some words. I have learned many more words and am able to understand pretty much all the TV shows on general topics and can actively participate in most conversations. I have learned many, many, many, many more words and am able to read about pretty much any topic and am able to entertain a reasonable and fluent conversation even about philosophy, science or any other subject. I realize however, that there are still occasionally some words or sentence structures which I do not fully understand and I have to look them up or ask a native person. What are the limits of your brain? Your brain can learn and remember only so much at the time. Learning a language is a rather huge task. In fact, all that is likely to remain, is the unpleasant memory of stressing and overloading your brain and the realization that you will never want to do such a thing again. Thus the words must come from your reliable long term memory. Scientific studies have shown that the transfer from short term to long term memory takes between 30 to 60 days depending on the relative importance of the memory trace. And even if you manage to bring your words from short term to long term memory you will still have to make sure that you repeat them regularly because although the long term memory is much more resilient against forgetting hence the name – forgetting occurs nevertheless if not periodically refreshed. How do you count 2 days and what can you reasonably do in 2 days? The obvious understanding is that by saying 2 days you mean for example today and tomorrow. And consequently when you say 10 days you mean from today on, the next 10 days. Obviously you cannot learn 24 hours a day thus the time when you can actively learn new things is limited by your need for sleep. Most people experience a strong fatigue after learning new things rather quickly. You have to give yourself a rest for maybe half an hour or an hour until you can continue again. Optimistically you will be able to make intensive learning sessions of 1 hour a day which results in about 2 hours in 2 days or 10 hours in 10 days. In 10 such intensive hours you will be able to learn the basic grammatical structures of a language nothing fancy and maybe about 50 words. In 50 hours you will be able to get an overview over most of the grammar excluding special cases and learn maybe about 250 words. Notice that this oversimplified back-of-the-envelope calculation assumes that you will not be doing anything else but learning intensively with intermittent breaks for your brain. If you try to do anything else demanding, any serious brain activity other than your learning, you will flush your short term memory and destroy your previous learning efforts. However there is a big catch: Learning things intensively like that does not impress the brain very much. As soon as you drop the learning you will forget pretty much everything again unless you repeat what you have learned regularly. Only because you have it in your short term memory does not mean you are able to apply what you have learned. If you space those 48 hours of two days such that you learn every day about 15 minutes, you will achieve the same thing as learning 10 days intensively. With one drastic difference: Why would you want to learn a language in n days? Before you read any further you maybe want to consider the question why you want to learn a language at all. Obviously learning a language to a certain degree requires quite a commitment and certainly a rather large number of hours of intensive learning investment. Whatever your reasons are for learning a language make sure that those reasons are more important than what you have to pay for it in terms of hours and effort. If you are still reading, you have probably made the conscious decision that it is worth it. Maybe because of your boy- or girlfriend maybe because of your work or family or other important circumstances. Of course it would be really fantastic to invest say 30 days and then be done with it and move on to the next great endeavor. Your brain learns only in one possible way. The more you are exposed to the information you want to learn the better the brain remembers it. It should take as little time as possible. Because spaced repetition is scientifically proven to be the most time efficient way to learn and retain any kind of information, in particular languages and the many words you have to learn to reach proficiency. Spaced repetition, such as our product Flashcard Learner, guarantees you that you spend the least possible time learning and repeating and reaping the maximum benefit from it. You can try it out for free here. This would not be a smart investment of your time and efforts. By using spaced repetition you will be able to spend as little as possible on learning or conversely to learn much more in the same time as with any other learning method. What is your goal? As you have seen so far learning a language is a relative term. Depending on the goal you set you will have to invest a different amount of time to reach it. Here are some possible goals and some realistic, conservative estimates how long it will take to learn a language up to a certain level: Get an idea of a language and its grammatical structure: Follow and understand TV and radio about words: Being fluent so that you are able to talk about what you just have heard on TV or radio about words and about sentences: These are estimates which are still low in comparison to what an ordinary school curriculum estimates about hours for level 3, that is, intermediate language skills. Good students might even achieve level 4 within this time, but only by taking additional classes and working much outside school on their own. However we are assuming that when you decide to learn a language on your own then your motivation is much higher than that of a typical high school student. On the other hand, since you possibly have a job, family or other obligations, your time is also much more limited than that of the high schools students who are obliged to attend school. By using spaced repetitions you will be able to learn the first words in about hours to long term memory spaced over about months. Our data suggests that this is true for any language. The first words of a language are generally more difficult to learn than the next because your brain will first have to create a feeling for the words and the language. Also the first words contain most of the basic and root words, which are then later found in compound words. While the meaning of such compound words still has to be learned, it is much easier to retain, because your brain knows already all the components. For example, if you were an English learner, you might have learned the words: Or for example if you learn the word to estimate, and the words under and over, then adding the words to overestimate or to underestimate is fairly easy. Thus, in our experience, learning another words after the first words will be in the range of only hours, nearly half the time needed for the first. These are estimates, which we have seen by people using our software. There are several factors which can lower the above figures significantly: For example, it strongly depends which language you want to learn. Depending on the similarity to your own language it will take you more or less time to correctly remember the words and move them to your long term memory. Also it depends how difficult the language is in absolute terms: The time needed to learn another language also depends on your previous experience in acquiring a new language. Please note that these numbers are averages based on the feedback we have received from active users of Flashcard Learner and cannot be a guarantee that the times are accurate for any language and any particular individual. How many hours should you put in? The number of hours invested into learning a language entirely depends on your goal. If you are fine having simple conversations only, then 50 to 60 hours are definitely reasonable. If you are shooting for near native conversational, reading and writing skills be prepared, however, to invest a large number of hours into your learning. It will take at least several hundred if not thousands of hours to achieve this level of skill. No matter what any language course will make you want to believe, learning a language requires a huge effort, and before you even start you should have good reasons to do so. So can you learn now a language in put your number here days or months? Also it depends how you count the number of days: So 10 full days of learning will indeed bring you at least to goal 3 if not 4 on the above list.

Focus on the Easy Parts of German Lots of people think German is a really difficult language to learn. In fact, German has a lot of things going for it that make it considerably easier than many other languages. When learning German, the trick is to focus on those parts of German that are easy to pick up. Alongside that, you can find hacks to help you get around the parts that are perceived as more difficult. German is an easy language to learn because it has: No tones, as there are in Chinese or Thai No liaisons between words, as there are in French Many of the same letters as English, unlike Japanese or Korean No postposition or preposition suffixes, like in Hungarian or Turkish No strings of difficult-to-pronounce consonants like in Czech. Plus, German is a phonetic language. This means that with very few exceptions you know exactly how to pronounce a word when you see it spelled. Likewise, when you hear a word you can almost always write it out. English, by contrast, has all sorts of funky issues with pronunciation. On top of that, many parts of German grammar are the same as English since they are both part of the Germanic family of languages. Older Anglo-Saxon texts are particularly close to the German language. Even more recent classics, such as Shakespeare, are closer to the German roots of English. There are many more ways that German is actually really easy, so be sure to check out my guide Why German is Easy where I explore this in a lot more detail. Just remember these important steps: Find your Big Why for learning German Immerse yourself in the German language by creating a Mini-Germany in your home Make smart use of language hacks Use conversational connectors to sound fluent and buy yourself time Speak from day one – especially with native speakers Realise that German is much easier than you think Conversational fluency in German is just around the corner! And now you have the tools to help you make the most of your German studies. Benny believes the best approach to language learning is
