Unfortunately, I read them out of order so I already knew the outcome of this book before I started it. Although there were 2 decades between the publishing of the 2 books, I read them within a month of each other. Consequently, I found that the 2 books were so similar that I felt I was reading the same book twice. The two bride groups followed the same pattern. Hawk and Little Wolf were also very much alike. It does make an excellent discussion book, as it brings up issues such as cultural differences and how people of different races and beliefs interact. The main character, May Dodd, starts out the book in an insane asylum, where she was committed by her family. A program to make peace with the Cheyenne Indians by offering them white woman as brides becomes her ticket out of the asylum. She and a band of other woman from a wide range of backgrounds are transported to Indian territory. If you are wondering if it would be a good read--it is! I highly recommend the audio version as well, that is how I enjoyed it and the narrator Laura Hicks performs the story brilliantly. She creates a voice for each character that sounds so true to who they are, and smoothly recites the many foreign words and even sings when needed. Her performance made it a joy to get into my car each day and experience this remarkable story Like 1 like AnnabelleLee27 Aug 25, A fictional account of a woman participating in a secret government program in the s seeking to assimilate the Northern Cheyenne into white "civilization" through marriage the exchange of a thousand white women for a thousand Cheyenne horses as told through her journals. The novel is notable for its depiction of Cheyenne life during the turbulent shift from independence to the reservation system and they are presented as richly complex humans rather than as simple stereotypes. The novel is also notable for its depiction of the women and how the conditions in the larger society led them to choose to participate in the program. Rather like the Cheyenne, they did not have many choices or even a safe way to exist within or along side the larger white culture. The novel addresses themes of belonging, respect, loss, and love. Like b brangwinn Jul 30, I was so disappointed to find out this account was fiction. Yes, disappointed, but yet amazed that an author could so completely wrap me in the story hook, line and sinker. Jim Fergus did his job. The story was riveting. Like v vv8 Feb 20, I wanted to like this book, but it read like a novel from the perspective of a woman written by a man a man, who has never met or interacted with a woman.

Between 26 November and 6 December letters I through XXV, which comprised part one of the novel, were serialized. The serialization had neither a foreword nor a dedication. The original division of the novel into three parts was retained. For this edition Balzac removed the foreword and divided the novel into two parts. He also altered the date of the foreword to "Paris, ". However, this fragment has little in common with Letters of Two Brides; it is not in epistolary form and its plot is quite different. Its relation to the later novel has still not been satisfactorily explained. When they leave the convent, however, their lives follow two very different paths. Louise is expected to sacrifice herself for her two brothers and take the veil, but the young girl refuses to submit to such a fate. Her dying grandmother intercedes on her behalf and bequeaths her her fortune, thereby rescuing her from the enclosed life of a Carmelite nun and leaving her financially independent. Free to assist her brothers financially without having to sacrifice her own ambitions, Louise settles in Paris and throws herself into a life of Italian operas, masqued balls and romantic intrigues. Banished from Spain, he lives incognito in Paris where he is forced to support himself by teaching Spanish. When he regains his fortune and noble standing, he woos Louise with a romantic fervour that finally wins her over. The pair are married in March He dies in , leaving a grieving widow of twenty-four. Gradually she grows to love her husband in her own way, and with her encouragement he makes a career for himself in local politics, which culminates in his becoming a peer of France and a grand officer of the Legion of Honour. True happiness for a woman lies in motherhood and devotion to her family. Meanwhile, four years after the death of Felipe, Louise falls in love again. This time the object of her love is a poor poet and playwright Marie Gaston, who is several years younger than she is. After a few years of apparent bliss, Louise detects a change in her husband. He becomes solicitous about the financial success of his plays, and a large sum of money goes missing. Suspecting him of having an expensive mistress, Louise makes enquiries and comes to the shocking conclusion that he has another family in Paris – an Englishwoman known by the name Madame Gaston, and two children, who look remarkably like Marie. The death of her husband has left her financially destitute and Marie has taken it upon himself to assist her and his two nephews, but he is ashamed to ask his wife for money. Louise has contracted consumption by lying out in the dew overnight and she dies a few days later.

I first read Pere Goriot in just such a chilly rented room. Have you read Modeste Mignon? Here we must thank the nineteenth-century translators. It is an amusing novel about love and novel-reading: No, Modeste picks a poet. If you want to have a doomed love affair, fall in love with a poet. Balzac likes to bend genre. This is a gentle comedy, and yet his heroine is as sharp as they come. They do not know if or when he will return. The older Mignon daughter eloped with a man who rejected her; she returned home very ill and died. You know the trope: The adults conspire to shelter Modeste from relationships with men. No wonder Modeste turns to books. She needs to live in dreams. Like Madame Bovary and Catherine in Northanger Abbey, she reads novels and romantic poetry and longs for love and excitement. Balzac explains, Modeste fed her soul on the modern masterpieces of three literatures, English, French, and German. To Modeste a new book was an event; a masterpiece that would have horrified Madame Latournelle made her happy,â€”equally unhappy if the great work did not play havoc with her heart. Balzac too had fans who wanted to be his penpals, and he had read the correspondence between Goethe and his fan Bettina Brentano, who was thirty-seven years younger. And so the comedy of their correspondence begins. When Charles comes home a rich man, he is not exactly thrilled about the letters. Does poor Ernest have a chance? There are some infelicities with tone in this translation. I suspect the letters between Modeste and Ernest would be much sillier in a modern translation, because Modeste and Ernest are so naive and earnest.. She took it quickly and bent her head over it.

Rather than supply a single translation, many words are translated for a variety of meanings in French, allowing readers to better grasp the ambiguity of English, and avoid them using the notes as a pure translation crutch. Having the reader decipher words meaning within context serves to improve vocabulary retention and understanding. Each page covers words not already highlighted on previous pages. A silver lamp studded with turquoise, and suspended by chains of beautiful workmanship, hung from the centre of the ceiling. The same system of decoration was followed in the smallest details, and even to the ceiling of fluted blue silk, with long bands of white cashmere falling at equal distances on the hangings, where they were caught back by ropes of pearl. A warm Belgian carpet, thick as turf, of a gray ground with blue posies, covered the floor. The furniture, of carved ebony, after a fine model of the old school, gave substance and richness to the rather too decorative quality, as a painter might call it, of the rest of the room. On either side of a large window, two etageres displayed a hundred precious trifles, flowers of mechanical art brought into bloom by the fire of thought. Above it sparkled the brilliant facets of a Venice mirror framed in ebony, with figures carved in relief, evidently obtained from some former royal residence. In this cold, orderly boudoir, where all things were in place as if for sale, no sign existed of the gay and capricious disorder of a happy home. At the present moment, the two young women were weeping. Pain seemed to predominate. The name of the owner, Ferdinand du Tillet, one of the richest bankers in Paris, is enough to explain the luxury of the whole house, of which this boudoir is but a sample. If love be the life of the world, why do austere philosophers count it for nothing in marriage? Why should Society take for its first law that the woman must be sacrificed to the family, introducing thus a note of discord into the very heart of marriage? And this discord was foreseen, since it was to meet the dangers arising from it that men were armed with new-found powers against us. But for these, we should have been able to bring their whole theory to nothing, whether by the force of love or of a secret, persistent aversion. I see in marriage, as it at present exists, two opposing forces which it was the task of the lawgiver to reconcile. The laws were made by old men—any woman can see that—and they have been prudent enough to decree that conjugal love, apart from passion, is not degrading, and that a woman in yielding herself may dispense with the sanction of love, provided the man can legally call her his. In their exclusive concern for the family they have imitated Nature, whose one care is to propagate the species. Formerly I was a person, now I am a chattel. Not a few tears have I gulped down, alone and far from every one. How gladly would I have exchanged them for a consoling smile! Why are our destinies so unequal? Your soul expands in the atmosphere of a lawful passion. For you, virtue will coincide with pleasure. If you encounter pain, it will be of your own free choice. Your duty, if you marry Felipe, will be one with the sweetest, freest indulgence of feeling. Our future is big with the answer to my question, and I look for it with restless eagerness. You love and are adored. Womanly beauty, refined and spiritualized in you, was created by God, for His own purposes, to charm and to delight. Above all, make trial of your own love, for this is even more important. It is so easy to be misled by the deceptive glamour of novelty and passion, and by the vision of happiness. Alone of the two friends, you remain in your maiden independence; and I beseech you, dearest, do not risk the irrevocable step of marriage without some guarantee. It happens sometimes, when two are talking together, apart from the world, their souls stripped of social disguise, that a gesture, a word, a look lights up, as by a flash, some dark abyss. You have courage and strength to tread boldly in paths where others would be lost. You have no conception in what anxiety I watch you. Across all this space I see you; my heart beats with yours. Be sure, therefore, to write and tell me everything. Your letters create an inner life of passion within my homely, peaceful household, which reminds me of a level highroad on a gray day. The only event here, my sweet, is that I am playing cross-purposes with myself. With dogged obstinacy, I pass from despair to hope, now yielding, now holding back. It may be that I ask from life more than we have a right to claim. In youth we are so ready to believe that the ideal and the real will harmonize! I have been pondering alone, seated beneath a rock in my park, and the fruit of my pondering is that love in marriage is a happy accident on which it is impossible to base a universal law. My Aveyron philosopher is right in looking on the family as the only possible unit in society, and in placing woman in subjection to the family, as she has been in all ages. The solution of this great—for us almost awful—question lies in our first child. For this reason, I would gladly be a mother, were it only to supply food for the consuming energy of my soul. He is happy, plucking the flowers which bloom for him, without troubling about the labor of the earth which has produced them. At whatever cost to myself, I fall in with his illusions, as a mother, in my idea of her, should be ready to spend herself to satisfy a fancy of her child. The intensity of his joy blinds him, and even throws its reflection upon me. The smile or look of satisfaction which the knowledge of his content brings to my face is enough to satisfy him. And so, "my child" is the pet name which I give him when we are alone. And I wait for the fruit of all these sacrifices which remain a secret between God, myself, and you. On motherhood I have staked enormously; my credit account is now too large, I fear I shall never receive full payment. To it I look for employment of my energy, expansion of my heart, and the compensation of a world of joys. Pray Heaven I be not deceived! It is a question of all my future and, horrible thought, of my virtue.
