Life in Australia booklet Page Content If you are applying for a provisional or permanent visa, you need to read, or have had explained to you, the Life in Australia booklet before you sign the Australian Values Statement.

Australia is an amazing place for students to study and is one of the top desired places to study abroad. Below are students sharing with us what it is like to be a student in Australia. During the week, most students have class Monday through Friday. If you have a light schedule some students like to go to the white sandy beaches before or after class depending on their class times. On the weekends, party goers like to shake things up a little by going to one of Australia's large duplex nightclubs. Make sure to take a cab back home if you are going to drink. Student Life in Australia When it comes to studying abroad in Australia, academics is only half the picture. International students choose Australia not only for the high quality schools, but also for the unique cultural experience. While students prepare for time overseas, they should spend some time thinking about how to ensure the best student life experience possible. The first major decision that affects student life in Australia is housing. International students in Australia have a variety of housing options, and housing is usually set up through the university or a study abroad program. International students should carefully consider their housing options. On campus housing allows students to have immediate access to student clubs and academic resources, which is not only helpful for studying purposes, but can also help students develop relationships. Even if students choose to live off campus, all international students in Australia should be sure to live close enough to campus to easily partake in classes, activities, and clubs. International students in Australia, whether on campus or off campus, should also prepare themselves for a roommate. Having a roommate can help international students make connections and venture out, which can be a quintessential step in experiencing student life in Australia. For some tips to have a successful interaction with a roommate, consider the ideas listed Student Life in Australia. Though housing has a significant impact on student life in Australia, nothing is more important than the student clubs available on campus. All schools and universities, no matter how large or small, will have a number of student organisations. These clubs can range in focus, from simple study groups to specialised activity clubs. In this way, students can join clubs that explore outdoor activities such as surfing, rowing, or cycling. Many schools will have information on clubs during orientation, and most international students will receive details regarding clubs as part of their welcome kit. Student life in Australia benefits greatly from university activities. These activities will vary from school to school, and can include everything from special guest speakers to group mixers. Students can even participate in group sporting opportunities, either casually or competitively. International students can use these activities as a way to not only meet new people, but to experience the culture of the school. Most schools will advertise upcoming events on their websites. The universities in Australia have much to offer students, but international students in Australia need to remember that some of the best experiences can be found off campus as well. Australia is a thriving, vibrant country, with culturally rich cities and awe-inspiring natural wonders. Therefore, to truly appreciate student life in Australia, international students need to take the time to explore everything this diverse country has to offer. This pursuit can begin in any of the cities around the country. Australian colleges are located in cities throughout the country, so students have the chance to experience a distinctive slice of the culture no matter where they are. From the sunny southern coast, to the Asian influenced northern side, each area has much to offer. Cities such as Perth, Melbourne, and Sydney have plentiful dining and shopping, reflecting the rich cultural heritage in Australia. Many major cities also have museums and cultural attractions. There are a number of professional sport teams around the country, with notable leagues in rugby, Australian rules football, and more. More information is available at: Beyond cities, Australia has a plethora of other opportunities for international students. In addition to beaches and mountains, there are also notable attractions such as the Great Barrier Reef and the Outback. Students can arrange tours of the Outback or guided trips to the Great Barrier Reef, both of which can offer once in a lifetime experiences. For more details on adventures for international students in Australia, peruse the options in our article Outdoor Activities in Australia. To help make the transition, all international students can consider more tips here:

When it comes to getting involved in the student life in Australia, it is important for international students to remember that the only wrong choice they can make is to not get involved. Study in New South Wales:

Life in Australia So how is life in Australia different from elsewhere? Not if you think about the daily routine: If sun, swimming and surf is not your thing you have plenty of options to go for a "tree change". Surrounded by the bush and wilderness. Waking up to the chorus of laughing kookaburras. Or the rolling trills of a lorikeet. From time to time learn to live with that possum that has made a home in your roof and is eating your plants. See, life in Australia is nice and sometimes funny. And how about checking your emails on your deck or gazebo or relaxing by the pool or the fish pond? Would you like that? Get an idea of what you need to do on the first day after moving to Australia. One of the first things to do is to get an Australian tax file number. You will need it when you do your tax return. Who knows, you might even get some money back from the tax office. Get some tips on how to search for Australian jobs. And once you get a job, start saving for a house. It is not easy as prices are not cheap. Mortgage insurance can help, but it comes at a cost. Life in Australia - Real Estate If you have opted for Sydney, do some research to see where to live in the beginning. See where the suburbs are and get to know more facts of Sydney Australia. Get more information about Sydney rental properties and how to apply for rental. But before that, read the Australian language article and get familiar with some of the terms and acronyms used by real estate agents in their ads. It will make it easier for you to browse Sydney classifieds and you will know what to expect when you go to see an open house. See how prices of Sydney Australia real estate kept pushing up. But there are many voices saying that they are now cooling down. Life in Australia - Money and Finance Whether prices are heading north or south, chances are you need to get a home loan. Life in Australia - Australian Values and Principles | 4 Background information This information is intended for people who are applying for a visa to live in Australia, either.

Although it is the sixth largest country in the world at over 3 million square miles, it is only home to 21 million people, which ensures that natural beauty dominates over suburban landscapes especially out of the main cities. The country boasts a diverse range of wildlife and nature and there are many species of animals and plants indigenous only to Australia. Moving to Australia provides the expat population with a very good quality of life. Life expectancy is high and stress is relatively low when compared with other countries in the world. Australia as an expat destination Founded by immigrants from the UK many of whom were convicts , the population has grown significantly. Today, Australia is extremely multicultural and encourages controlled immigration from Europe and the US. The s saw the country actively promoting immigration from abroad with many British families being offered incentives to move there; as long as they were white. Luckily however, this was abolished in and ever since then the country has become increasingly cosmopolitan. Today, Australia remains a very popular expat destination and is considered to be one of the best places in the world to live because of its low population density, high standard of life and the unpolluted atmosphere. According to the Human Development Index HDI , Australia is ranked 7th out of a total of countries with this ranking being based upon high scores in GDP, life expectancy, literacy and education. It is perhaps due to these reasons that Australia is so popular with people who are moving overseas. Cost of living in Australia Expatriates moving to Australia from Europe will generally find that the cost of living in Australia to be relatively high when compared with that of their home country and in recent months this has continued to rise at a breakneck pace. The Mercer Cost of Living Australian cities continue to rank high on the list in the Asia Pacific region and, following the strengthening of the Australian dollar, have all experienced further jumps up the global list since last year. Sydney 11 and Melbourne 15 experienced relatively moderate jumps of three and six places respectively, but Perth 19 and Canberra 23 both jumped 11 places. Brisbane 24 rose by seven places, and Adelaide 27 shot up 19 places. In addition to facing high living costs in Australian cities, expatriates may also find that they are paid less and face higher tax bills here. In terms of purchasing power parity, Australia provides its residents with a similar level as that available in Japan and a higher purchase parity than the United Kingdom and Singapore. For full details of all the costs you can expect when living in Sydney please see our guide to living in Sydney. Language English is the official language spoken in Australian and you will have no problem communicating or conducting business when moving to Australia if you speak English. Climate Australia is so large that it actually experiences an extremely varied climate; different parts of the country experience different weather patterns. Northern Australia is tropical, with hot and humid weather and seasonal monsoons. In contrast, Southern Australia experiences a temperate climate with distinct seasons. Summers are long and hot while winters are cool and occasionally wet. Rainfall is low throughout the country which is why there is often danger of bushfires. Because of the diversity in climates, there will be a weather pattern to suit virtually everyone; another reason why Australia is so popular. However, because the climate does differ so much, it is crucial that you research any city that you are considering relocating to carefully in order to ensure that you find a climate that suits you. There are plenty of jobs of all levels available to those who want them. However, it is becoming increasingly difficult to gain work permits and residency if you are moving to Australia from overseas. Immigration polices have become a lot tighter over the last decade and most people looking to move and work need to be able to offer a skill in order to gain a work permit. Retirees will be given visas if they have enough money and if you have sizeable savings, regardless of how old you are, you will have no problem. If you have yet to secure work it is useful to consult with a careers adviser. Australian based advisors will be in a position to advise you of your job prospects in the region and whether or not your own skills and experiences will be in demand in this country.
