For example, a Franciscan friar uses the post-nominal initials "O. Equally, a Viatorian priest uses the suffix "C. These initials are not considered by members of religious institutes as an equivalent to academic or honorary post-nominal initials, but rather as a sign of membership in a particular religious lineage, similar to the use of "Senior" or "Junior". Ordering[edit] In some English-speaking countries, the arrangement of post-nominal letters is governed by rules of precedence, and this list is sometimes called the "Order of Wear" for the wearing of medals. Legal status[edit] Special legal entities are created with the addition of status terms: Generational suffixes are used to distinguish persons who share the same name within a family. A generational suffix can be used informally for disambiguation purposes, or as nicknames and is often incorporated in legal documents. In the United States the most common name suffixes are senior and junior, which are written with a capital first letter "Sr. In Britain these are more rare, but when they are used the abbreviations are "Snr" and "Jnr", respectively. When the suffixes are spelled out in full, they are always written with the first letter in lower case. In many other nations, it is considered highly unusual or even inauspicious to give a son the same first name s as his father, removing the need for such suffixes. Sons with a different middle name or initial may also be informally known as Jr. William Vann Rogers Jr. Roman numeral suffixes can be used to name after other family members like an uncle, cousin, or ancestor including grandfather. The suffix "III" is used after either Jr or II and like subsequent numeric suffixes, does not need to be restricted to one family line. If Patrick now has a son, his son is Patrick Jr. Whoever is first to have a son named Patrick. This is one way it is possible and correct for a Junior to father a IV. Another example involves President Ulysses S. Grant and his sons Frederick, Ulysses Jr, and Jesse. There is no hard-and-fast rule over what happens to suffixes when the most senior of the name dies. Etiquette expert and humorist Judith Martin , for example, believes they should all move up, [4] but most agree that this is up to the individual families. Usually, the namesake is given a different middle name and so would not need a suffix for differentiation. Furthermore, once the woman marries, she would most commonly take the surname of her husband and thus do away with the generational suffix. A wife who uses the title Mrs. In less formal situations, the suffix may be omitted. Chaney or simply Shannon Chaney for a friendly note. Ward and Erick R. Common nicknames for a junior or II include "Chip" as in "chip off the old block" ; e. Common nicknames for a III are " Trip p ", "Trace", and " Trey " which denote that the name carrier is the third person to carry the name. Another convention is for the elder member of a family to go by their first name, and the younger one to go by their middle name. Examples include George Virl Osmond , who went by George while his eponymous son goes by the name Virl. Another
