Ayumi Fujimura Karada is a cheerful young girl who is about to enter her first year of junior high school. Her adopted parents died when she was two years old, and since then she has lived with her older brother, Hiro. Despite her age, she has learned to cook and do house chores herself. Her wish to not be a burden on her brother, combined with her knowledge unknown to Hiro that she is only an adoptive sibling, drives her to wish to become an adult. Her friend and classmate, Tetsumasa, seems to have feelings for her. She first meets Karada at the shrine that contained a fated wishing stone. She did not know Hiro had a younger sister. She wished to become a child, without knowing herself that she really wished for it. She starts to get attached to Karada after she knows her properly. They went to the same university in Boston. He thought that he would return to America right after the funeral, but after meeting her he could not leave her alone. He works in a pharmacy. Tetsu is quite tall, and jokes that he is sometimes mistaken for a high school student. It is implied that he loves Karada when Karada "went missing" after she became older, he ran all over town to find her. She works at the coffee house Hiro often visits. She is an original character in the anime and thus was never in the manga version. Compared to the anime adapted from it, the manga includes more personal drama between the leads, and introduces several more characters who are also vying for the Wishing Stone. It also clarifies several points which are left ambiguous in the anime, such as the precise nature of the relationship between Hiro and Karada. Anime[ edit ] An anime adaptation was produced by J. Staff and directed by Katsushi Sakurabi. Two image song albums were released sung by the voice actresses from the anime. The first album was released on December 6, featuring songs by Ayumi Fujimura who voiced Karada Iokawa ; while most of the album is by Ayumi Fujimura, the last song, "Namida Gumo", is sung by Suara.
