This suggests, very strongly, that the founder of the Clan MacNab belonged to the clerical profession. It is believed that he was the Abbot of Glendochart. During the 13th and 14th centuries, the MacNabs were a relatively large clan. Bruce and the MacDougalls fought a number of times. It was fought sometime during the summer of , and saw a victory for MacDougall. His victorious troops ravaged the lands of the MacNabs, destroying all the family writs. Gilbert is recorded to have died during the time of Robert II. The chief himself died in at Eilan Ran. He was buried at Killin, on the lands of Ewer and Leiragan, which were granted to his wife, Mariat Campbell, for her lifetime. This chief Finlay continued the violent feud with the Clan Neish, or MacNeish, who held the lands in the upper part of Strathearn and lived on the lower part of Loch Earn, which they called Neish Island. Many battles were fought between the MacNabs and Neishes with varying success for either side. The last battle fought between the two was at Glenboultachan, where the MacNabs were victorious. Nearly every Neish was killed in battle, but a small number survived and continued to live on Neish Island, plundering and stealing from the neighbouring families. The MacNab chief, one Christmas, sent a servant to the town of Crieff for provisions for the coming festivities. However, on his way back to the MacNab home, the servant was beaten and robbed of everything he had, and could do nothing but return to his master empty handed. When they arrived at the loch, the men rowed over to Neish Island and killed every Neish there, bar two who managed to hide under a bed. As trophies of their revenge attack, the young men took back the heads of the Neishes along with any plunder they could carry. When the twelve returned they presented to the chief what they had come away with and the piper struck up the Pibroch of Victory. The head on the Macnab crest is supposed to be the head of the Chief of the Neishes, brought home by the lads to their father. At the Battle of Kilsyth, on 15th August , the Clan MacNab, along with the chief of the time, were known to have fought on the victorious side, along with their friends and allies Clan Robertson and Clan Ogilvy. All made it passed the besieging force except from the MacNab chief and one other man who were both captured and sent to Edinburgh as prisoners. MacNab was sentenced to death, but managed to escape and his rejoined the Royalist forces to continue the fight. At the Battle of Worcester, Smooth John MacNab, now a good bit older than at time of the Neish revenge raid, led a number of MacNabs into battle where he was killed. The land of the MacNabs was once again ravaged, this time by the Covenanters, and the family once again lost a lot of their papers. Together they had one daughter and one son, Alexander MacNab, in Alexander was only four when he became ninth laird after his father was killed on the Worcester battlefield. The family tried to get some financial relief after the death of Smooth John, however this was unsuccessful. The MacNab clan were divided during the Jacobite uprisings. He fought at the Battle of Prestonpans where he was captured and held prisoner until after the Battle of Culloden in . A lot of the MacNab estate was passed over into the possession of the House of Breadalbane. This was due to the burdens of debt accumulated on the estate by the twelfth chief. Then the last chief who had his home at Kinnell immigrated to Canada. The chief later returned to Scotland and sold the Dreadnought Hotel in Callander, which was the last of his possessions here. The Clan MacNab family in Glendochart is their secluded, romantic burial place among the trees on the islet of Inch Buidhe, not far from Kinnell.
