

1: Last Chance: '39 Ethel Waters Hit, Mamba's Daughters, at HERE to Mar. 14 | Playbill

Mamba's Daughters (ISBN) is a book authored by DuBose Heyward and published by the University of South Carolina Press. The book is set in the early 20th century, following three different families in scenes of deception and social transformation.

The Bride portrayed by Uma Thurman , is the protagonist of the film. This action provokes the attacks on her and her loved ones and the ensuing revenge, which is the entire basis of the film. Bill [edit] Bill portrayed by David Carradine is the main antagonist of the film, and last on the list. He is the founder and leader of the Deadly Viper Assassination Squad, to which The Bride formerly belonged, and also her former lover. Some time after the massacre, the squad has disbanded. He then sends former Squad member and mistress Elle Driver to the hospital to kill her, but Bill changes his mind and tells Elle to abort the mission, saying that killing a helpless person would demean the name of the Assassination Squad. After an evening with Bill and B. Lucy Liu as O-Ren Ishii. Cottonmouth portrayed by Lucy Liu , is a half-Japanese, half-Chinese-American woman, and first on the list. O-Ren experienced her first encounter of death when at the age of nine, while hiding underneath a bed, she witnessed both her parents being brutally murdered under the orders of a Yakuza boss who turned out to be a pedophile and his associates. An anime flashback showed her father in a U. Army uniform wearing the rank of sergeant major fighting the assassins. The house was later destroyed in a fire to cover up the act but young O-Ren escaped and although she was left physically unharmed, she was left psychologically and emotionally scarred for life, swearing revenge against the crime boss responsible. O-Ren is fiercely proud of her heritage, going so far as to decapitate her own subordinate when he vented his frustration over being led by "a Chinese Jap-American half breed bitch", subsequently informing the rest of her subordinates that she will accept open debate about any other topic but discussion of her heritage as a negative will be met with immediate decapitation. While sitting in a room apart from the other guests, O-Ren hears a sound outside the room and throws a dart in that direction. She orders Gogo to take a look; however, Gogo finds nothing. During the battle, O-Ren mocks The Bride as a "silly Caucasian girl who likes to play with samurai swords. O-Ren utters with her dying breath "That really was a Hattori Hanzo sword", having been close enough to both see the symbol of Hattori Hanzo and feel the blade. Vernita Green [edit] Vernita Green, a. Copperhead portrayed by Vivica A. Four years after the massacre, she is depicted living a normal life under the alias of Jeannie Bell. She is trained in hand-to-hand combat and knife fighting , and it is hinted that she and The Bride share a mutual, professional respect for each other. Green sends Nikki to her room and she talks with The Bride over coffee, apologizing for betraying her and asking for mercy on behalf of her daughter and family, The Bride coldly refuses and they agree to meet in the middle of the night to have a knife fight. However, Vernita betrays her promise, and shoots at The Bride with a handgun concealed within a box of Kaboom cereal. Elle Driver [edit] Elle Driver, a. California Mountain Snake portrayed by Daryl Hannah , is another swordswoman who is loyal to Bill and fourth on the hit list. Elle and The Bride despise each other immensely, and it is implied that their mutual hatred came to be before the events of the film. Despite this, Elle does grudgingly respect The Bride, describing her as "the greatest warrior [she] had ever met" and also believing that she deserved better than to have supposedly met her end at the hands of someone like Budd. When she showed disrespect to Pai Mei by calling him a "miserable, old fool", he responded by plucking out her right eye as punishment, which is why she is shown to wear an eyepatch over it. In retaliation, Elle murdered Pai Mei by poisoning his meal of fish-heads. When Bill learns that The Bride survived the attempt on her life, he orders Elle to kill her at the hospital where she was lying comatose. Disguised as a nurse, Elle nearly injects The Bride with a deadly poison when Bill calls her to abort the mission. While he struggles for life, she tortures him by reading useful information about black mambas and the anti-venom needed to counteract the venom. As he succumbs to its venom, Elle reveals both her disgust for Budd and regret for not having the chance to face The Bride herself. When Elle is about to leave the trailer, The Bride ambushes her. The Bride leaves Elle, now completely blind, thrashing wildly on the floor of the trailer with the black mamba still loose inside. Her fate is unknown, as evidenced by the question mark over her name during the ending credits other deceased characters were shown with a red strike line over their names. Living in a mobile home where he steadily became an alcoholic, Budd makes ends meet by working as a bouncer at a local strip club. When told by Bill that Beatrix was coming to kill him, Budd philosophically stated "That woman deserves her revenge. And we deserve to die. But then again, so does she. She takes advantage of the situation in torturing Budd slowly by reading useful information about Black Mamba poison and the effects of it if not injected with anti-venom. But before The Bride battles and defeats her, she must first confront and bring down her associates one by one. She then sends her rolling down a hill to a hospital for medical attention so she can live on and tell Bill what has happened and that The Bride is still alive. It includes members of both sexes and a wide age range. Most of them fight using katanas except for three members. One is shown with a pair of throwing axes and another is seen briefly wielding a meteor hammer. After the fight any surviving member was taken into custody after leaving the nightclub, although their arrest by Japanese police and hospitalization before being locked up in prison is not shown. One of the last of the Crazy 88 members The Bride faces before O-Ren is a very timid teenage boy whose katana she cuts into several pieces with her own, after which he surrenders immediately. She spansks him with the flat of her blade and orders him to leave criminal life and crime business by the words "Go home to your mother". Aside from Johnny Mo, only one member of the Crazy 88 is identified and named. Quentin Tarantino appears as one of the members whose throat is slit after The Bride dismembers the eye of one of the gangsters. The Crazy 88 allegedly does not actually have eighty-eight members. Bill says that they adopted the name because it "sounded cool". There are only 40 actors credited to the Crazy The gang are dressed in black and white like the piano keys. There are two different versions of the fight scene with the Crazy Johnny Mo is most prominently featured in the "House of Blue Leaves" scene. He is a more proficient fighter than the rest of the gang, nearly tipping the scales in their favor and holding his own against The Bride for several minutes alone while fighting her on top of a balcony railing. She eventually chops off his legs and he falls into a bloodied fountain pool from the second floor balcony and is presumed dead thereafter. Gogo is a sociopathic and ultraviolent seventeen-year-old schoolgirl who takes a sadistic delight in killing. Her fighting style is a combination of wushu techniques using chain whip and rope dart or meteor hammer. Or is it I who has penetrated you? Although The Bride gives her the opportunity to walk away, Gogo refuses and takes her on with a large meteor hammer, almost overcoming The Bride by strangling her savagely with the chain. Eventually Kiddo distracts Gogo by driving a broken chair leg studded with nails into her foot, then kills her by driving the nails into the side of her head. Upon first coming out of her coma, The Bride believes her unborn child was killed in the attack and promises to avenge her death. The audience does not learn that she is alive until the last line of Vol. Buck[edit] Buck portrayed by Michael Bowen is a male nurse at the hospital where The Bride laid comatose for four years. During this period, he regularly took sexual advantage of The Bride, raping her unconscious body and later also prostituting her to other male clients. After she first awakens, The Bride attacks Buck and interrogates him on the whereabouts of Bill. She uses the truck during her scenes in the United States during Volume 1, but in Volume 2 says that it has broken down and she has thus acquired another vehicle. Earl McGraw[edit] Earl McGraw portrayed by Michael Parks is a Texas Ranger who investigates the murders at the wedding chapel, and the first person to realize that The Bride has managed to survive the attack. When The Bride visits him she notes, perhaps with irony, that after everything she has done to get to Bill, it is this "retired gentleman of leisure" who will be the key to helping her find Bill. He also compliments The Bride on her beauty saying that she would have been his "number one lady" when he ran his business, causing The Bride to smile slightly and be flattered at the praise. When the Bride confronts Bill and spends time with her daughter, Bill comments that B. He became the owner of a sushi shop in Okinawa. He initially refused to make a sword for her, or even give her one he had previously made, but was convinced to make one for her after The Bride tells Hanzo that the vermin is a former student of his and he owes a rather large obligation. The swordmaster stated that while he believed in his oath to God, he also agreed on a philosophical level with what The Bride was trying to do; possibly feeling sympathy for what and how she had suffered. The Bride shows Hattori respect when during the presentation of the sword she wears clothing appropriate to the occasion, and thanked him in Japanese. She narrowly misses hitting The Bride with shotgun fire. He is seen doing cocaine with one of the dancers before

Budd strolls into work 20 minutes late. An argument ensues over the fact that "there is nobody there to bounce". He almost fires Budd but reduces the number of hours Budd will be permitted to work and tells him to come back when he calls him. She makes an appearance in Vol. Vernita explains that the family dog made the mess, to conceal her past from Nikki. However, with sympathy, The Bride tells Nikki if she still feels "raw" about it, she will be waiting for her in the future. Quentin Tarantino has commented that any potential Kill Bill sequel will focus on her revenge against The Bride. Pai Mei [edit] "Pai Mei" redirects here. For the historical figure, see Bak Mei. As depicted in the film, Pai Mei was a powerful, very old practitioner of the Bak Mei style of kung fu. He is described as a wise and knowledgeable White Lotus priest, but also as racist , xenophobic towards the Japanese and Americans , and a misogynist. He only agreed to take on The Bride as a student after having a martial arts duel offscreen with Bill. Beatrix ultimately wins his approval for her perseverance under his torturous training regimen. She uses it to kill Bill. During a training session, Elle insults Pai Mei as a "miserable old fool". In retribution, Elle poisoned fish heads that Pai Mei eats. Before dying, Pai Mei calls her a treacherous dog for her actions, warning her that her day will come. I was a Drifter. I was a Coaster.
