I think it was peppered three or more times throughout the whole text how he hated being made to represent gay people. He mentioned he hated the rainbow flag, and I think that might be because it further serves to underscore the fact how homosexuality is not in the mainstream? Or just maybe, he wants to emphasize that being gay is not at all the copestone of his character. And then again maybe he just hates being made to "emblemize" gay people in general. Anyway, perhaps he was annoyed with your mum because she assumed she was accorded some special treatment and extra schmoozing time just because her son was gay. Maybe I hate David Sedaris so much abstractly; not with the visceral hatred I have for Mariah Carey because I imagine all of these young straight couples in J. Crew worsted wool sweaters throwing back their heads like Mrs. Howell, laughing at his weak but fashionable humor. Have you been to Oak Brook? They probably live there and have heated floor tiles and towel warmers in their bathroom. The women all look like cut-rate Carolyn Bessette-Kennedys before the plane crash , and the men look like the guy getting married in The Hangover. David Sedaris is an entry-level gay for these people, right? You know, the usual A-Team of tanned men with shaved forearms and hyperreal hairdos. What I am saying is that David Sedaris is a nice accessory. Anal sex and its intimations take on a Bombeckian glow in his hands. And that kerrunk, kerrunk sound you hear is Jean Genet rolling over in his grave and masturbating on a pile of his own feces. There are currently twenty-one people on my friends list who have rated this book. Only two have assigned it fewer than three stars. Defend yourselves, bourgeois scum. I mean that affectionately.
