At the close of Mr. John Wentworth moved that the thanks of the Society be tendered to Mr. Goodwin for his able and interesting address, and that a copy of the same be requested to be placed in the archives of the Society. And he wished the audience would excuse him for saying that he hoped that the research that Mr. Goodwin had manifested, and that the very interesting manner in which he has handled his subject would be a model for other lectures. Some of our lectures abound in facts; but these facts are not handled in a manner to make them interesting, whilst other lectures abound in eloquent expressions without the facts to make them instructive. This lecture will bear repeating; and if Mr. Goodwin was only a professional, it would be a good one to travel over the country with. I am surprised that we have never heard from Mr. Goodwin before, and I hope we shall often hear from him hereafter. I see many around me who are in the habit of passing their summers in the vicinity of Hampton, N. Dearborn is pointed out. Since this lecture, that place will possess additional interest. Having expressed my views elaborately as to the public services of Gen. Dearborn, at the unveiling of the Memorial Tablet to mark the site of old Fort Dearborn, 21 May, , I will say no more of him than that history records no other man who was at the battle of Bunker Hill, the surrenders of Burgoyne and Cornwallis, and then took an active part in the war of He was among the very first men to respond to the call of his country, and among the very last to leave the field of battle. I doubt if there has been a man of such humble pretentious with so valuable and long-continued public services. Although born and rai Aproveite para se inscrever em nosso canal!

Daniel Pace Goodwin Sr., "Danny" died of a sudden heart attack Friday afternoon, July 27th, at the age of He was predeceased in death by his father, C. Eugene Goodwin, Sr. and his brother, John Edwin Goodwin.

Their children born in Kittery, Maine: Patience Goodwin born about David Goodwin born about Adam Goodwin born about Thomas Goodwin born about James Goodwin born about Daniel Goodwin born about William Goodwin born about Moses Goodwin born about Sarah Goodwin born about Elizabeth Goodwin born about The first record of Daniel Goodwin in New England is a grant of land made to him by the town of Kittery in Daniel Goodwin was a pioneer, a sergeant in the local frontier force, a constable, a member of the church, a tavern proprietor, and a land owner in the parish of Quamphegan, a part of early Kittery that became Berwick and then South Berwick, Maine. He leaves to descendants eligibility for membership in the Piscataqua Pioneers whose ancestors must have settled on either bank of the river in colonial days , in Flagon and Trencher, Descendants of Colonial Tavern keepers, and in the Goodwin Family Organization. There are several of his blood in all three. Daniel was a surveyor, an innkeeper and a large landed proprietor. He kept a public house with and without a license and at times was in court because of "disturbances" which occurred at his establishment. He was in Kittery in when he signed the submission to Massachusetts. He received his lot by a town grant in 1 and was a constable of Kittery 10 Dec. He was a selectman 13 Apr. We will take you from the first generations who settled along the "Marble" rocks of Little Harbor to present generations still living in town. William Goodwin, born year ago, would surely be pleased. Immigrating to Boston in with his two brothers, William arrived in Marblehead two years later to build the Second Congregational Church on Mugford Street. It is no longer standing having been destroyed by fire. But the Old Town House, which he built in , still stands at the junction of Washington and Mugford streets. It has been designated for the National Registry of Historic Landmarks. William stayed on in the town, and with his wife Jane Ashfield had six children. About a century and a half later, the top floor of the building he constructed was dedicated to his great, great-grandson, Lt. On Waldron Street stands a house "built in by Joseph Goodwin, housewright. They were built by William Goodwin and a son, and one is still in the family. An earlier family house is located on the corner of Pearl and Washington streets. This hip-roofed Federalist mansion was constructed in by William Goodwin, the great grandson of the first William, and remained in the family for years. When William died in , discrete pieces of house became property of the heirs, according to a history commissioned by the current owners. The three-story house was sold to the current owners by the First Church of Christ in Marblehead Old North and is distinguished by its fine central spiral staircase, panelling, molding and mantles. The ground floor of the structure was for at least a century a "West India goods store. Up through the sixties, "Bub" Goodwin operated a market there. Having once sold a customer a fuzzy piece of fruit, this Goodwin was stuck with a nickname. Washington Street seems to be where a lot of Goodwins started out. William Knowland was an engineer who managed the municipal light department. He and his wife are now retired and living in New Hampshire. Dan even began his working career in that part of town before going uptown to Bessom Street where the lumber yard is located. When I started, the pay was a chocolate soda. We bought the merchandise, small things for younger children, from a truck that would come by. Eventually, I became manager and stayed until My wife Shirley was a bookkeeper there and left when we had Russell, our first child. The third brother, William, is an architect living in Winchester, Massachusetts. Randy said, "My son Jonathon is a student at Northeastern. Her relative by marriage and a teacher as well, Janis Goodwin Gallagher grew up on Meadow Lane and remembers, "there were always six or eight Goodwins at Gerry when I was there from kindergarten through the sixth grade. Doaks Lane was the site of B. Back then, many houses were built to last. Like ships, they were joined with tenons and joints to give in the wind. Sometimes buildings were moved from one town to another: Instead of erecting a new structure at a new location, the old one was put on log skids and relocated. William Peach, a mason and the son of Edith Goodwin Peach, can list several buildings in town that were moved by the company. He described the white three-story house on the corner of Village Street and Heritage Way as part of a bigger structure moved up from Pleasant Street by "Topsy" Goodwin, who carried on the business after Benjamin Franklin died. There were also Goodwins who farmed. Henry , who owned land on Naugus Head, was the last farmer who took produce by wagon to Haymarket, according to Bill Peach. The Peaches were not the only Marbleheaders Goodwins married. And names that they gave their children reflect tradition -- William and Hooper, together in combination with other names, appearing again and again, right down to today. One Goodwin married a Hepzibah and another a Mehitable, but seemed to have spared their daughters the same fate. Like many old Marbleheaders, Dan laments the loss of open space in town, especially the field and meadows where West Shore Drive now exists. He and his downtown playmates could pretty much walk and play around the rim of the harbor. Education is important to Dan Goodwin: My children go to Coffin and my wife volunteers there. Given the growth of the community since William first arrived in , many apparently agree with Dan Goodwin that "Marblehead is a good place to raise children.

Only a few attended the first reunion, but today more than descendants of the immigrant were present. A feature was the basket lunch, which was enjoyed in the pine grove. During the dinner a fire started in the young pine growth near the park buildings, and had it not been for the prompt assistance rendered by men attending the reunion, who, in the absence of water to fight the flames with, beat and stamped them out, serious damage would undoubtedly have resulted to the park property.
