Idioms. get the message, Informal. to understand or comprehend, especially to infer the correct meaning from circumstances, hints, etc.: If we don't invite him to the party, maybe he'll get the message.

If a recipient is not reachable, the SMSC queues the message for later retry. Both mobile terminated MT, for messages sent to a mobile handset and mobile originating MO, for those sent from the mobile handset operations are supported. Message delivery is "best effort," so there are no guarantees that a message will actually be delivered to its recipient, but delay or complete loss of a message is uncommon, typically affecting less than 5 percent of messages. However, the exact meaning of confirmations varies from reaching the network, to being queued for sending, to being sent, to receiving a confirmation of receipt from the target device, and users are often not informed of the specific type of success being reported. Enterprise applications using SMS as a communication channel for stateful dialogue where an MO reply message is paired to a specific MT message requires that session management be maintained external to the protocol. Short messages can be encoded using a variety of alphabets: Routing data and other metadata is additional to the payload size. Since UDH is part of the payload, the number of available characters per segment is lower: The receiving handset is then responsible for reassembling the message and presenting it to the user as one long message. While the standard theoretically permits up to segments, [48] 10 segments is the practical maximum with some carriers, [49] and long messages are often billed as equivalent to multiple SMS messages. Some providers have offered length-oriented pricing schemes for messages, although that type of pricing structure is rapidly disappearing. Considering SMS messaging performance and cost, as well as the level of messaging services, SMS gateway providers can be classified as aggregators or SS7 providers. Aggregators lack direct access into the SS7 protocol, which is the protocol where the SMS messages are exchanged. The advantage of this model is the ability to route data directly through SS7, which gives the provider total control and visibility of the complete path during SMS routing. Therefore, it is possible to avoid delays and message losses, offering full delivery guarantees of messages and optimized routing. This model is particularly efficient when used in mission-critical messaging and SMS used in corporate communications. Subscriber-terminated messages are transported from the service center to the destination handset, and may originate from mobile users, from fixed network subscribers, or from other sources such as VASPs. Sending email to SMS is free for the sender, but the recipient is subject to the standard delivery charges. Only the first characters of an email message can be delivered to a phone, and only characters can be sent from a phone. However, longer messages may be broken up into multiple texts, depending upon the telephone service provider. However, messages can be delivered to nonenabled phones using text-to-speech conversion. An alternative way for sending such binary content is EMS messaging, which is standardized and not dependent on vendors. Reverse SMS billing, Mobile search, and Short code Short messages may be used normally to provide premium rate services to subscribers of a telephone network. Initially, only Nokia branded phones could handle them. Outside the online world, one can buy a bus ticket or beverages from ATM, pay a parking ticket, order a store catalog or some goods e. The subscribers are charged extra for receiving this premium content; the revenue is typically divided between the mobile network operator and the VASP either through revenue share or a fixed transport fee. Submission to the SMSC is usually handled by a third party. In this case, the VASP providing the service obtains a short code from the telephone network operator, and subscribers send texts to that number. The payouts to the carriers vary by carrier; percentages paid are greatest on the lowest-priced premium SMS services. Most information providers should expect to pay about 45 percent of the cost of the premium SMS up front to the carrier. Subscribers are charged a premium for the sending of such messages, with the revenue typically shared between the network operator and the VASP. Short codes only work within one country, they are not international. Long numbers work internationally, allow businesses to use their own numbers, rather than short codes, which are usually shared across many brands. Additionally, long numbers are nonpremium inbound numbers. It was first invented by a developer working to implement the SMS client for the BlackBerry, who was looking to make use of the blank screen left below the message on a device with a larger screen capable of displaying far more than the usual characters, and was inspired by threaded Reply conversations in email. This limitation is due to the fact that there is no session identifier or subject-line passed back and forth between sent and received messages in the header data as specified by SMS protocol from which the client device can properly thread an incoming message to a specific dialogue, or even to a specific message within a dialogue. Most smart phone text-messaging-clients are able to create some contextual threading of "group messages" which narrows the context of the thread around the common interests shared by group members. A2P is a type of SMS sent from a subscriber to an application or sent from an application to a subscriber. It is commonly used by financial institutions, airlines, hotel booking sites, social networks, and other organizations sending SMS from their systems to their customers. There are specialist companies such as MMG Mobile Marketing Group which provide these services to businesses and enterprises. The price per message varies for different networks. Unlike some mobile phone networks, there is no extra charge for sending international SMS or to send one to a different satellite phone network. SMS can sometimes be sent from areas where the signal is too poor to make a voice call. Satellite phone networks usually have web-based or email-based SMS portals where one can send free SMS to phones on that particular network. The authentication is unilateral and also vulnerable. There are also many other security vulnerabilities and shortcomings. SMS messaging has some extra security vulnerabilities due to its store-and-forward feature, and the problem of fake SMS that can be conducted via the Internet. When a user is roaming, SMS content passes through different networks, perhaps including the Internet, and is exposed to various vulnerabilities and attacks. Another concern arises when an adversary gets access to a phone and reads the previous unprotected messages. The researchers speculated that attackers might exploit the open functionality of these networks to disrupt them or cause them to fail, possibly on a nationwide scale. The most serious threat is SMS Spoofing, which occurs when a fraudster manipulates address information in order to impersonate a user that has roamed onto a foreign network and is submitting messages to the home network. Frequently, these messages are addressed to destinations outside the home network with the home SMSC essentially being "hijacked" to send messages into other networks. This can be implemented by adding an intelligent routing function to the network that can query originating subscriber details from the home location register HLR before the message is submitted for delivery. This kind of intelligent routing function is beyond the capabilities of legacy messaging infrastructure. They do not show up on a display, nor trigger any acoustical signal when received. Their primary purpose was to deliver special services of the network operator to any cell phone. The mobile provider, often at the behest of the police, will capture data such as subscriber identification IMSI.
