Microwave Cooking for One by Marie T Smith Microwave Cooking Tips Crafts From Your Microwave
Microwaves are great for cooking, but they are also wonderful utensils for creating some beautiful items to decorate your home, or give as gifts to family and friends. Here are a few books available to help you get even more use out of your microwave. Gone are the problems of traditional methods – finding dark, dry space, fading, and weeks of waiting – and gone is the need to buy expensive, commercially dried flowers. Flower Drying With A Microwave unlocks the secrets of preserving virtually any flower. Detailed charts and useful tips help you dry over different flowers, including delicate roses, tulips, violets and wildflowers. Includes Complete Microwave Drying Instructions by Dolly Lutz Morris and Alice Ensley – "A rose is a rose is a rose is a rose," or so the saying goes – but not all flowers dry the same. Make beautiful dried flower arrangements that look like they cost a fortune, and revel in compliments when you say, "I did it myself! For those already versed in flower drying, the reference section is broken down alphabetically by flower name. Each profile gives a description of appearance, along with advice on growing and landscaping, harvesting and drying, and crafting. Learn ahead of time which drying method will work best with each bloom, and which blossoms to use for the effect you want. Microwaved Pressed Flowers by Joanna Sheen – "Thanks to the revolutionary techniques and the step-by-step instructions in this unique manual, the art of flower pressing is easier, quicker, and promises more beautiful results than ever before – using your microwave. Projects in the book include: There are also instructions for constructing your own flower press. Herb Drying Handbook by Nora Blose – Preserve the color, shape, flavor, and even fragrance of more than 60 of your favorite herbs by instantly drying them in your microwave under the expert guidance of the Herb Drying Handbook. Lavishly illustrated with full-color photographs and drawings of individual plants, herb gardens, and craft projects. Microwave Dough Craft by Alison Jenkins – With just salt, water, flour and a microwave oven, anyone can design wonderful creations for the home. How to Microwave Salt Dough Ornaments Separate your ornaments (or whatever you are making with salt dough) into a few dinner plate sized batches Spread them around a large plate and then microwave on High for between 50 secs and 3 minutes total.

I used to make these every year with Miss Teen and when I pulled a few out of the box this year it reminded me that the toddler twosome were now old enough to also participate in this fun family tradition! I love that children can be involved in the process right from beginning to end by mixing the ingredients together to rolling out the dough to cutting out shapes then decorating when dry! It really is a simple process! But it worked a treat and made a lovely white dough! Normally with salt dough you need to cook the salt dough for hrs in a slow oven to really dry them out and harden enough for children to paint – this time however I simply cooked them using the microwave oven and it saved so much time! Not to sure about using the microwave to speed up the cooking and drying out process? Check out my easy instructions below and give it a try! Check at second intervals as cooking times will vary and it is quite easy to burn and go past the point of no return!! Turn over once during cooking time to help both sides dry out evenly. If they still have a few wet patches even after 3 minutes just cook in 10 second intervals until hard all over. Keep it as simple or as messy and colourful as you like. You might even decide to leave them white although a little sprinkle of glitter after brushing with glue is nice too. There was a whole lot of glitter love going on which I figured there would be with toddlers but the beauty of these salt dough ornaments is that each child is free to decorate in any way that they want – they may not be perfection but they were so very special to me and will remind me of this Christmas for many years to come! Ruby had lots of fine motor practice with her glitter shaker! I was really pleased with how white and hard the dough turned out considering I used a new recipe and different method of cooking! I think these will be around to hang on the tree for many years to come! Another good thing about doing them outside was that there was plenty of opportunity to go and have a little run around and then come back to the creativity! We did quite a big batch so I have kept some for adding to family members Christmas presents – the rest have found a spot on the tree! This activity is so toddler friendly! Microwave Salt Dough Recipe and cute rainbow fish craft. Ideal for making with your kids or in a classroom as instead of waiting hours for the salt dough to dry out it's ready in minutes to paint and decorate.

This simple, super-quick salt dough recipe is made even easier in that it can be hardened in the microwave within seconds. Now that is something a wet afternoon or weekend needs! If it is too sticky, add more flour. Once the dough is ready, give it to your child to play and create with. So, I posted the recipe on my Facebook page for people to play along as we did. Salt dough is so much fun for littlies to biggies as long as supervised. J loves playing with salt dough and as well as enjoying the experience, we wanted to make a birthday present for Daddy! No matter how grumpy J is, play dough, moon dough, modelling clay or salt dough, never fails to bring a smile to his face. I know I bang on about this a lot, but fine motor development is fundamental to the journey of learning to be independent when taking care of themselves and when learning to write! A lovely explore and hand workout all in one. J talked about shapes as he cut with the cutter and even counted the sides to the octagon. He incorrectly called it a pentagon but this gave us a natural opportunity to revisit the names of the shapes. I was very impressed! This comes from providing lots of opportunities to play with all kinds of dough. As well as making lots of mess, J also cleared up after himself. A real must in my opinion! As J cleared up, I popped up the pieces in the microwave. Depending on the wattage of your microwave, the dough will need to be in for 30 second intervals. Every 30 seconds, check to see if the dough is completely hard. It will be hot, so be careful! Once the dough is hard, leave it to completely cool before decorating. If you do not have a microwave, you can pop it into a VERY low oven for around 3 hours or until hard. The decorating bit! J had some left over dough so I cut out the letter of his name using a plastic knife. However, paint is lovely on these salt dough decorations. We gave them out as a gift from J to his best friends and his family. The rest, J wanted left in one piece. Baby G was having a nap during this part of the afternoon, so we sat around the table and decorated together, chatting and giggling as we did so. Working collaboratively is fantastic for their social development too. J was full of smiles as we sat and chatted. The listening part in a conversation is quite often what children find difficult so they need lots of experience of listening to people and responding to what they say. It sounds so basic but there are SO many children who start school without this fundamental skill. Once we had finished I laid the pieces out for the glue to dry! J quickly spotted it and put it in the correct order. More child-led rehearsal of name formation! Theo is 14 months old and loving the messy play with salt dough. The finished article looks incredible but not as incredibly cute as little Theo is! Thank you Mummy Helen for sending them to me and playing along with us this afternoon!! What do you think?

Half of this dough recipe is enough to make all the ornaments shown, plus extras. You will also need paint in red, green, white, and gold, plus green glitter paint, and trims such as iridescent stars, pom poms, mini candy cane erasers, and glitter chenille stems. Use Christmas cookie cutters to cut a variety of snowmen, Christmas trees and stars. Use a toothpick to make a hole for hanging, being sure to make the hole a bit larger than you will want as they tend to close when baking. Using a microwave-safe plate not paper or cardboard, microwave a plate of ornaments for 1 to 4 minutes, increasing the time by 1 minute increments and keeping a close eye on the microwave as the ornaments bake. Microwave power levels differ, so use high power in a less-powerful oven, but lower if your oven heats things very quickly. Let ornaments cool completely before decorating. Use paint or markers for eyes, nose, mouth and buttons. You can also paint on a scarf, unless you are using chenille stems. Take one chenille stem and, leaving enough stem to form an arm on the left, wrap the stem around the neck, and form another arm on the right. Add mini candy cane erasers if desired. Base coat white or gold. Add green glitter paint, or outline with gold paint or glitter paint, if desired. Glue an iridescent star in the middle of each ornament. Take a chenille stem and, leaving a little extra at the top to form half a loop, bend the stem around each star point, pushing in with your fingers until the stem will retain the star shape. You will find the stem ends at the top with some extra left over. Bend both of these end lengths together to form a hanging loop. Base coat green, then re-paint with green glitter paint. Glue sparkly pompoms or two iridescent stars glued together on top of the tree if desired. These are just some possibilities for decorating microwaved salt dough ornaments. This is a good group project – just microwave batches of ornaments and provide paints and embellishments for creative activity. Properly dried the ornaments should last years.
