We need some visibility in this community. There are a few well-known vinyl collecting ladies, but the overwhelming focus has always been on men. Name, age, location, social media handle. Amy, 36, Massachusetts, vinylhysteria When did you get into vinyl? I grew up in the 80s when cassettes were the big thing, but my parents bought me a small record player housed in a multi-colored cardboard case. As I grew older, I started buying records for the bands I liked, particularly the Carpenters. And then in my early 30s, my interest grew more serious, and I started collecting records in earnest. What was your first vinyl record, and how was it acquired? Was it a gift or did you purchase it? What attracts you to vinyl as a medium? I love the physicality of vinyl. I love the entire process of going to a record store, finding an album, studying the artwork and the track listing, interacting with the shop owner to purchase it. I love taking it home and opening it up, holding the vinyl in my hands and feeling its weight, reading the inserts and looking at the pictures and label information. I love the act of turning on the record player, adjusting the settings, and carefully dropping the needle onto the vinyl. I connect so emotionally and viscerally to music that it feels more real to me to find, purchase and listen to that music through the vinyl experience. How many records do you have in your collection? What is your stereo setup like? I have a Soundesign stereo system with a turntable, cassette player and 8-Track, all housed in an original cabinet with storage below. Once I started collecting vinyl more seriously, my parents passed it down to me. I store all my records in 3 mil polyethylene round-bottom inner sleeves and 3 mil polyethylene jacket sleeves from Bags Unlimited. I have part of my collection "mostly older records in less-than-stellar condition" in the storage beneath my stereo system. The remainder of my collection, including my most valuable records, is kept in a Kallax unit from Ikea. Where do you shop for your vinyl? I prefer to shop for vinyl in record stores. I love checking out new shops, and I like supporting small businesses. While I prefer to do my purchasing in person, sometimes I resort to online resources to get the hard-to-find items on my wantlist. What is your favorite record store and why? I love this shop for several reasons. My first excursion there was for Record Store Day a few years ago. The store is small, but incredibly neat and organized, and he places the album info and price on a sleeve sticker at the top of the album so you can flip through quickly without having to pull everything out. Best of all, Joe is a super nice guy. Bonus "in a recent article, he said that the majority of his clientele is female. The tiny store is floor-to-ceiling stacks of records, cassettes, CDs, posters, etc. It seems like chaos, but if you ask him for something, he knows exactly where it is. That Sarah Harmer poster that hung in his window five years ago? Yeah, he can dig that up for you. Come for a record, but stay for the conversation, because he has a lot of stories to tell, especially about local musicians and there are a lot in Kingston, the city having been home to a great number of Canadian artists. What genres of music make up your vinyl collection? My music tastes run from folk to punk to easy listening to hard rock. I have a little of everything, though a good bulk of my collection consists of bands from the Pacific Northwest and Canada most of those are punk, post-punk, or indie. What is your current favorite record on vinyl? What is your most prized record? What white whales are you still looking for? My copies are all pressed on black vinyl. What is your favorite album cover art in your collection? The design on the reverse is excellent as well. Do you have a favorite record label? If so, what is it and why? My favorite record label is K Records. Coming in at an extremely close second is Kill Rock Stars. I have so many records from KRS probably more from this label than any other, and love so many of their artists. How do you connect with other vinyl enthusiasts? I connect with others through social media, mostly. Twitter and Instagram, and, more recently, YouTube. I also like to poke around the forums on various music sites. Do you know a lot of other women who collect vinyl? As I started to connect with more music fans through Twitter and Instagram, I found that there were women out there with similar musical tastes who were really into vinyl. My hope is that I can meet other women who are serious or even casual collectors, and help bring more visibility to female record collectors through my blog. Do you have any advice for women or girls who are interested in starting a vinyl collection? Jump in head first. But start small by going in and looking for a record by a band you love.

Ask them for recommendations. One other piece of advice: Even though those Crosley turntables are adorable and affordable, spend a little more cash and invest in a better starter turntable. Playing your records on a Crosley or another cheap turntable will likely ruin them over time.
