Monster is a friendly loveable character who has many adventures. In this book, as the title implies, Monster's adventure happens while buying a pet. This book is part of a collectable series of Monster books by Ellen Blance.

A pet is a non-combat NPC loyal to a player that is generally obtained from monster drops and skilling. Available to members only, some pets must be raised to maturity by following the player, such as cats. Pets can also be interacted with. Most pets do not serve a purpose other than aesthetics, as most pets are very rare drops from certain bosses or skilling activities, and thus are often considered prestigious. A player may only have one pet following them at one time. Pets may be stored in the bank or inventory, and will follow the player when dropped. Players can store up to 52 pets in the Menagerie of a player-owned house with the highest-level pet houses. Unlike other pets, kittens must be stroked and fed regularly or they will run away. Once they reach adult stage, they no longer need to be fed. Contents [show]

However, if a player receives a pet while having a follower out for example, a cat, it will be placed into their inventory. When this occurs, the message in the chatbox will instead state You feel something weird sneaking into your backpack. If a player's inventory is full and they have a follower already, they will not receive the pet. When skilling, the pet is prioritised over the resource gathered; it will be placed in the last inventory slot available, while the resource gathered will be dropped underneath the player if their inventory becomes full. When this happens, players will receive the message You have a funny feeling like you would have been followed An exception to this is the Abyssal orphan, as it is not tertiary and cannot be rolled if the player already has it. If a player dies with a one-off pet following them or if it is in their inventory and it is not one of the items protected on death in a dangerous situation, the pet will be dropped and wander around the area for 30 seconds before despawning. Even if the player returns in time, the pet cannot be picked up. If the pet is not insured, players must re-obtain the pet as if they never had it. Development[edit] The idea of a family of comical monsters was first suggested to Universal Studios by animator Bob Clampett , who developed the idea from to as a series of cartoons. For some time, there were executives who believed the series should be made as a cartoon and others who wanted to see it made using live-action. He also added a stutter to bolster his character whenever he was angry or wanted to make a point, and he frequently left his mouth open, adding to the effect of a more goofy, less frightening, figure. Munster Mansion While its humor was usually broad, the series was visually sophisticated. A running joke was that when Lily "dusted" the house, her Electrolux emitted clouds of dust, which she applied to surfaces most people would clean. Although many episodes featured scenes outside the house, much of the action took place within the walls of the home. Leo Durocher , who was then coaching with the Los Angeles Dodgers, guest-starred as himself in one episode, further hinting that the show was set in, or near, Los Angeles. The exterior shots were filmed on the Universal Studios backlot. In the s, it was assembled with other homes on the backlot. Until production of The Munsters in , the house could be seen as a backdrop on many shows, including Leave It to Beaver. The " Munster Koach " was a hot rod built on a lengthened Ford Model T chassis with a custom hearse body. Pitch episode[edit] cast photo with Yvonne DeCarlo as Lily and Butch Patrick as Eddie The first presentation was 16 minutes and in color later cut to just over 13 minutes and was used to pitch the series to CBS and its affiliates. It never aired, and the script was reused as the basis for episode 2, "My Fair Munster". The cast in order of appearance in the title sequence were: Although the same house exterior was later used in the actual aired series, it was changed at that point to make it look more gothic and "spooky". Although Grandpa had the same dungeon , Herman did not have padding in the pitch episode, had a more protruding forehead, and was broad but thin. The most noticeable difference was his somber expression, compared to his comical silliness during the series. The biggest character difference was that Eddie was portrayed by Derman as a nasty brat. It was also decided that Joan Marshall looked too much like Morticia Addams [15] and that Happy Derman was too nasty as Eddie, so both were replaced. A second black-and-white presentation was made with the new actors.
