Email A firefighter sprays water on a controlled burn at a wildfire, Friday, Nov. Abandoned, charred vehicles clutter the main thoroughfare, evidence of the panicked evacuation a day earlier as a wildfire tore through the Northern California community. Nine people have been found dead. Entire neighborhoods are leveled. The business district is destroyed. In one day, this Sierra Nevada foothill town of 27, founded in the s was largely incinerated by flames that moved so fast there was nothing firefighters could do. But crews have made gains and the fire is partially contained, officials said Saturday. The dead were found inside their cars and outside vehicles or homes after a desperate evacuation that Butte County Sheriff Kory Honea called "the worst-case scenario. With fires also burning in Southern California , state officials put the total number of people forced from their homes at more than , President Donald Trump issued an emergency declaration providing federal funding for Butte, Ventura and Los Angeles counties. He later threatened to withhold federal payments to California, claiming its forest management is "so poor. Remedy now, or no more Fed payments! The company had canceled plans to cut off power to the area because of high winds before flames ignited. The fire in Paradise, about miles kilometers northeast of San Francisco, was still burning out of control. A thick, yellow haze hung in the air, giving the appearance of twilight in the middle of the day. Some of the "majestic oaks" the town touts on its website still have fires burning in their trunks. Thick wooden posts holding up guardrails continued to burn. An evacuation order Thursday set off a desperate exodus, with frantic motorists getting stuck in gridlocked traffic. Many abandoned their vehicles to flee on foot as the flames bore down on all sides. The town, in a canyon between two ridges, was a popular retirement community, raising concerns about elderly and immobile residents who have been reported missing. He and neighbors used a backhoe to create a fire line, determined not to lose his house again. He worked so long in the flames and smoke that he needed to use oxygen Thursday night at his home, but he refused to leave. On Friday, Knuthson was covered from head to toe in black soot. His tiny town will never be the same, he said. The bucolic country landscape dotted with bay and oak trees will take years to recover. Nicolas Church still stands, a rare exception. The nearby New Life church is gone. An unblemished Burger King sign rises above a pile of charred rubble. Only blackened debris remains behind the Happy Garden Chinese Restaurant sign touting its sushi. On the outskirts of Paradise, Krystin Harvey lost her mobile home. She described a town rich with historical charm, until a day ago. It had the old buildings lined up along the walkway," she said. The town was famous for the discovery of a pound gold nugget in the s, which eventually prompted a festival known as Gold Nugget Days. The highlight of the festival is a parade that features a Gold Nugget Queen. Just miles kilometers north, the Carr Fire near Redding was the sixth most destructive wildfire in California history and one of the earliest. It killed eight people in July and August, burned about 1, homes and consumed square miles square kilometers before it was contained. But she was clinging to hope. Rodriguez and Sudhin Thanawala in San Francisco contributed to this report. Darlene Superville contributed from Paris.

'More Than Paradise' is a stand-alone that has just become my newest Fulton favorite. Here, Fulton introduces two characters who seem extremely familiar. They have many of the characteristics one encounters in this genre.
