York Institute Fentress County Importance: York Agricultural Institute is the only such school operated by the Tennessee Department of Education. York Agricultural Institute building had been neglected for a number of years. Not only is the building still standing, it has been stabilized and is awaiting further restoration based on a soon-to-be determined adaptive reuse plan. The Tennessee Historical Commission THC has been a dedicated and invaluable partner in the effort to preserve the historic structure. Preservation grants have been received from the THC, which have been instrumental in stabilizing the building. Private donors have contributed to the preservation effort, and former congressman, Lincoln Davis, was helpful in securing funds to further the preservation process. With continued community support, this vision will be realized. After an eight-year struggle against all odds, the Sergeant York Patriotic Foundation celebrated the successful attainment of the historic York Institute building in Jamestown. York dedicated his life, was slated for demolition. This led to a campaign to save the building. The Tennessee Preservation Trust had named the York Institute to its Ten in Tennessee most endangered properties list and helped raise awareness of the situation. Over the eight years, dozens of people testified before the State Building Commission about the importance of the structure. An agreement was reached on January 20, , which turned York Institute over to the Sergeant York Patriotic Foundation so that they can move forward to raise funds and restore the structure to its past glory. Mount Olivet is the oldest continuously operating cemetery in Nashville, TN. It was officially chartered in October , but it appears that it was used as an extension of the City Cemetery as early as Brown, Speaker of the House and Edward S. Cheatham, Speaker of the Senate, Tennessee Legislature. There are currently over , gaves and , monuments, mausoleums and headstones in the cemetery. Hill, John Overton, Reau E. Vandalism is a problem, and many monuments and mausoleums have been damaged. Olivet Cemetery Chapel and Office has continued to deteriorate since first listed in the Nashville Nine. Built in stages between the s and s, the historic landmark suffers from significant water damage, broken windows and doors and structural failureâ€œOfficials with Historic Nashville and the Metro Historical Commission have held multiple meetings with the staff in hopes of creating a plan to save the building from the wrecking ball. Some positive momentum has come from the talks as Mt. Olivet leadership allowed the Nashville City Cemetery Association and Tennessee State Library and Archives to remove the cemetery records and scan them, creating a permanent digital archive. The property continues to be threatened with neglect, deterioration and demolition. The house was built in The original survey shows that it was part of a acre tract. This deed was filed April 15, at Murfreesboro. The property was in receivership and to be sold at auction. Demolition was a major threat. If left as is, it would have continued to be vandalized and destroyed. Memphis Housing Authority, which is administering the HOPE VI grant, was not interested because of the expense and difficulty of renovation to fit their needs. Shake Rag Marion County Importance: Perched along a bluff overlooking the Tennessee River, the community was permanently abandoned circa In , thirty-four structures remaining from the community were documentedâ€œ including ruins of the original school, commissary, hotel, coke ovens, rail incline, and worker housing. Since the survey, many of the remaining structures have deteriorated or have been vandalized. Listing would help raise awareness within the state management agencies and local preservationists. It was hoped that the listing would encourage these agencies to ensure the preservation of this rare and important resource. Still threatened even though Shake Rag was placed on the National Register and a Preservation and Management Plan was completed in The terrible battle that was waged across much of what is now within the city limits of Franklin on November 30, was one of the bloodiest and most strategically important of the entire Civil War. Lack of formal protection and development. Precious little of the battlefield had been protected. Local preservation efforts had been very encouraging, and began attracting national attention and support. The group needed additional funds to make sure that the restoration of over acres of what was the eastern flank of the battlefield would be a success. In July , a conservation easement on historic Windermere, located on Carnton Lane, and 40 acres around it were donated. The Franklin Battlefield, Inc. Several parcels of the Franklin Battlefield have been purchased and are now protected, including the site of the Carter Cotton Gin. It was listed in on the National Register of Historic Places. Demolition due to abandonment and neglect. All work to repair the building must be done to code, Glasgow said. It is our understanding that the City committed to remove the east and west wings of the building, which were in the worst state of repair and which were not needed by the club for the immediate future. Once completed, efforts to refurbish and equip the main portion of the structure can begin. Someone has already agreed to undertake the necessary repairs on the kitchen area and gymnasium. Others have promised funds for other areas of the building. This is one of the few African-American farms in Tennessee built on land acquired shortly after the Civil War. Early in the s, Matt Gardner, a former slave, purchased acres and began to develop a large farming operation. By , he had built a two-story saddlebag-I house on the property, as well as several outbuildings. A preacher and entrepreneur, Gardner became a pivotal community leader, erecting a school for local blacks and providing credit for his neighbors. The homestead was added to the National Register in for its significance in the areas of African-American ethnic heritage, agriculture, commerce, and architecture, from to Restoration work began in to stabilize and make safe the foundation and flooring. This part of the restoration process was done in three phases. In , the Front Porch Foundation and Deck were rebuilt; The development of the community of Coal Hill began in , when J. Crooke and partners organized the Crooke Coal Company. Sold in and renamed the Glenmary Coal and Coke Company The community quickly developed into a thriving industrial village, complete with segregated company housing, a company store, churches, and industrial structures associated with coal mining and coke production. The coke operation ceased in , with the larger coal operation ceasing in As is typical in Appalachian coal towns throughout the greater region, Coal Hill and Glenmary quickly deteriorated after the withdrawal of the coal company. What little remains of this former industrial boom town face serious threat of loss from neglect and vandalism. The remaining resources include a series of coke ovens ca. As coal mining resources throughout the northern half of the Cumberland Plateau are diffuse and often in derelict condition especially industrial structures themselves , the properties at Coal Hill represent an important and under-appreciated resource type. An effort had been made by the county and some local citizens back in ; however, the deal fell through. Last year they were asked to get involved and decided to make another effort to preserve this site and especially the beehive coke ovens. They want up to date photos of the ovens and site; however, the overgrowth of vegetation prevented the group from getting good photos. They are currently waiting for the frost to take down the vegetation to get good photos. The Society currently has a museum display about Coal Hill and will be in place until the end of the year. They conducted tours during the 4th of July and have taken several other people and groups through the exhibit. The historical district application is said to be complex with the need for digitizing of info and getting together lots of documentation; however, they are going to make an effort with the help of the ETDD to guide them. The Society currently publishes for sale two books about Coal Hill and its community and are trying to generate local interest in the project. An example of Georgian Revival architecture, the house sits on the corner of Tennessee Boulevard and Main Street at the edge of campus. Loss of historic setting. The house itself is not threatened. As a result of proposed road improvements along Tennessee Blvd. Crosstown Sears Shelby County Importance: Opened in , the impressive Art Deco landmark Crosstown Sears represents a significant part of the retail and commercial history of Memphis. The Crosstown Sears was the 14th retail store opened in the country and one of the few built in the suburbs in the s. The building is stories tall and held more than , square feet of retail space. The retail store closed in with the catalog distribution center closing in The building had been vacant since its closure. The Memphis Landmarks Commission listed the property on its endangered list. A mixed-use development had been proposed before for the building, but funding was unavailable. As of August , St.

I cannot believe that. I dreamed that mama and I were in your bed room at Glendale lane. Mama put her purse down on your jewelry table and knocked Mama put her purse down on your jewelry table and knocked over the glass Pegasus figurine that I always thought of you when I saw it. I was so sad and angry at mama for it. But then noticed how sad mama was so then I comforted her. I like looking back on these entries as the years pass by so I can re-read them. So, until we meet again. I continue to miss you as every year passes. I even miss you lecturing me about some bad decision and calling me back on the phone a couple of times to finish lecturing me, hahaha. You were my second mama! I love you and I miss you dearly. Thank you for being the best Aunt 2nd mama to me and Les. I miss you more than ever and so does mama and Lesley. I finally quit smoking and I quit vaping. I know you are proud. I wish you were here. I love you and miss the crap out of you I still miss you badly. I wish you were still here with us. I love you and always thinking and talking about you. It seems a lifetime ago. Only 3 years ago but seemes to be a lifetime ago. I have so many fond memories that include her. I am so glad she was my sister. I just wish I could talk to her again. I am so sorry that I did not visit more with her. She was the cement of the BAM Unit, and we all will miss her terribly. A more generous, kind and loving soul is rarely found. And, although the world is diminished by her absence, the good and fond memories that we hold leaves and unquenchable brightness.
