Dear Godfather, In an effort to express my sincerest gratitude to you, I decided to write this letter. In reality, this is a feeble attempt to thank you for everything you, and your incredible wife, have done for me and will only merely scratch the surface of what I would like to tell you.

If you are, it means Mary and I are dead. It was only last week we asked you to be her godfather. To be honest, Sherlock, I have no idea what I should write. But if you are reading this then I must be gone I mean I better be - if you steal this letter and read it while Mary and I are still alive rest assured I will kill you. But there are some things I want you to know. First, I have always trusted you. I need you to love her. But I need you to show it. She has to know she is loved, and that her mum and dad loved her more than life itself, more than anything. You always have been. I want her to be safe, and happy. Make her smile too, Sherlock. Make sure she never misses an episode. If she wants to learn ballet or boxing or whatever, make sure she has everything she needs to be as brilliant at it as she can. Give him a chance. Unless he seems dodgy, then call Lestrade. I told you once that you were the best and wisest man I had ever known. I know this will be hard for you. I believe in you. Always have, always will. Take care of my daughter. Love her, hug her, laugh with her, protect her, hold her when she cries, and dance with her for me on her wedding day. Thank God - you just texted me. Something about a beehive. I love you both, and I always will. Nothing could ever change that. Time to get to Baker St. To the very best of times, eh? Take care of yourself. Please click on my profile to find it! The author would like to thank you for your continued support. Your review has been posted.

Get this from a library! C.S. Lewis, my godfather: letters, photos, and recollections. [Laurence Harwood; C S Lewis] -- It has often been suggested to me, following talks I have given in England and the United States about my memories of C.S. Lewis as a godfather, that I should write down my recollections so as to.

Much of the book was about his correspondence he wrote about seven letters each day. The text was interspersed with copies of his actual handwritten letters and old photos. I liked how sometimes he and his friends wrote letters to each other in Latin and Greek. Most of all I liked the delightful way he wrote to children. His letters to them were charming yet informative. It would This book provided a personal glimpse of the kind of fun, thoughtful, and caring person and friend C. It would have been great to have known him and to have received letters from him signed "Your affectionate godfather, C. Lewis enthusiast will find an enjoyable read--especially since there are letters included in the book that were previously unpublished. You come away fr As a die-hard CS Lewis fan, this book was a joy to read. You come away from this book feeling like you know what it was like to walk and talk with Lewis. Adding to this personal feel are the numerous pictures of Lewis and his friends. There are even pictures of the letters he wrote, which when addressed to his godson, contain drawings of bears, castles, etc that illustrate the letters. Very personal biography, with nuggets of wisdom throughout. Lewis, memories from early childhood through adulthood. He provides a glimpse of Lewis from a home and family view via years of correspondence between Lewis and his parents and with others. The book has many letters, including original poetry. In a sense, the book can be like Gordon Laurence Harwood shares his recollections of and correspondence with his godfather, C. I would have loved a bit more about Lewis himself and a bit less about his friends, though I suppose that was necessary. I also liked that pictures of original letters and tiny little sketches were included, too. I guess I just wanted a bit more information. Aug 16, Alex rated it liked it The most charming section of this book are the letters the author received from his godfather both growing up and as an adult.

Letter to My Goddaughter Dear Grace, I wish your godfather and I could be there for your confirmation next Sunday, but it looks like this letter will have to do instead (not that I could be any more eloquent in person).

Letter to My Goddaughter Dear Grace, I wish your godfather and I could be there for your confirmation next Sunday, but it looks like this letter will have to do instead not that I could be any more eloquent in person. I feel rather like C. Lewis when he was writing to his goddaughter Sarah on the occasion of her confirmation: Lewis on what it means to live the Christian life—“which is both serious and fun, in all the best ways. Being nice is not Christianity. Rather, as Lewis says, Christianity means becoming an entirely new person, cutting away the old life and taking on the new life of Christ. Perhaps many loving adults have told you that confirmation is simply about church membership, or that it will look good on your college application. And how much it hurt to become a real boy again, to have Aslan tear the scales off his body? Confirmation is part of the tearing. So here are some of the highlights in a nutshell. In the first part of the book, Lewis explains how human beings—“across cultures and centuries—“have appealed to a universal Moral Law that determines right and wrong behavior. But where did they get the idea of right and wrong? Christians know that Someone as God. So what must be done? The answer to the problem of sin of falling short of the Moral Law comes from the Christian understanding of salvation through God in Christ. First, Christians believe that the universe is at war: Evil is fallen goodness, a rebellion against God. Second, humans have joined in that rebellion, to our peril. Confirmation is part of a broader rite of Christian initiation that begins with baptism and includes the other elements too. This is how we join the winning side, the side of life—“of divine life. For some reason we adults seem to think that the best way to equip young people for a life of faith is to give you a series of topical lessons on moral issues like sex or lying or drug abuse. Yes, knowing about the virtues is important. You must practice them. Please forgive your elders: We have forgotten that the most important way to teach you about the virtues is to be virtuous ourselves. Lewis means well in his section on Christian behavior, but I hope you will read his fourth and final section most thoroughly of all. In this section he lays out what is truly at stake in the Christian life, which is that we become like Christ, the second person of the Trinity, who participates in the divine life of the Father from before all time—“and by being connected with Christ we can become connected to that divine life too. Lewis uses the example of toy soldiers made of tin who meet a toy soldier who has become real, who is made of flesh. Because that one soldier has become real, we too can become real. We are to become more and more like Jesus with every thought, every decision, every small and large movement in our lives. As I said before, this has nothing to do with being slighter nicer than we were before. Remember the Halloween that you dressed up as a princess and I dressed up as your fairy godmother, complete with wings and a wand? Well, the Christian life is something like that. We put on the outward behaviors of the kind of people we want to become—“in this case, we want to be like Jesus—“and those outward behaviors gradually begin to change us on the inside. Eventually, one day, you really will be a princess—“a daughter of the King, inside and out. And I really will be the godmother your parents asked me to be for you. Until then, we must pray for each other. She can be reached at www.LewisLetterstoChildren.com, edited by Lyle W.

Letters from Paul Claudel, My Godfather has 2 ratings and 1 review. Dhanaraj said: In my quest to read some Catholic writers, I came upon the name Paul C.

However, just like quitting a job and leaving a workplace for the last time, I did feel a sizeable sense of loss, mixed with relief. I was departing from a child. Even Debretts states that "there are no hard and fast rules to being a godparent these days". One thing I will say for having a two-year-old godson: Islington townhouse, a holiday home in France and a live-in au pair. Josh, along with his slightly older sister, Nina, were set up for a life in which, I figured, my role was all but irrelevant from the outset. Nonetheless, after a rather awkward christening ceremony speech in which I waffled out that old Henry James quote about the right time being any time that one is still so lucky as to have, I settled down to the business of trying to be a good godfather. Alamy I also began to hugely resent what I surmised was the real reason behind my appointment as godfather. Why was I invited to be part of this? I was a sort of court-jester godfather, a glimpse of a less materialistic existence, an alien artefact to be prodded at over ghastly lunchtime barbecues with other bankers and their wives. We really must get one of those," I imagined the other couples saying to each other. I spent most of these occasions playing with the children. My friendship with Carly and Mark cooled. Gifts I brought round for Josh quickly vanished; dumped, I suspected, in the nearest charity shop. And, when I was lectured by Carly on the fact that I should stop smoking despite my never having lit up within a half mile of my godson I decided enough was enough. I sent an email which, on reflection, was perhaps a little too angry. I later regretted some of the things I said, but it did the trick. Free from the agonising position of feeling responsible for somebody but not being able to wield even a modicum of influence. Insert your own Nick Clegg gag here if you like. So my godfather days are over. Should I have been more flattered to be asked? Josh will be just fine with a new godfather "€" whoever he may be.

This is a charming, if slight, memoir of Lewis's relationship with Cecil Harwood, Owen Barfield and his godson Laurence. It is beautifully illustrated throughout with early pictures of Lewis, Harwood, and Barfield.

It is hard to believe it has been three months since God called you home so unexpectedly. I remember you saying that when everyone else thought I was going to be a boy, you thought I was going to be a girl. I guess that is how far back our story goes. I suppose I have never not known you. You have been there since before my daddy was my daddy – hanging out and growing up with him. I am weeping as I write this because I wish I could say it all to your face. I did not know I would never have the chance again. Since before I can remember, you were always there with candy. No kid left church on Sunday morning without a lollipop in his or her mouth. What joy to see the Candy Man coming! I am pretty sure you kept them in business. I am not sure why this memory stands out to me – but, after we ate, we walked on the beach and I remember you and Becky holding hands as you strolled. It was sweet and it must have made a lasting impression on my young mind. Fast-forward a few years and I remember sitting in your living room as you held the new baby boy God so graciously gave you and Becky. Sure, the baby was cute, but I was jealous. Having no brothers and sisters, you allowed me to love on your little boy as my own sibling. Who else besides you and Becky would allow a ten-year-old to hang around all the time? You made me feel like part of your family – never like I was a bother. I can still remember the car ride where I asked you if you would be my godfather, having absolutely no idea all that such a commitment would entail. You probably did not remember this conversation – but when I was eleven, you told me I was gorgeous. What little girl at one time or another has not questioned her appearance? This little girl questioned it all the time. I cannot remember how the conversation started. You looked at me and said it as if you deeply meant it. There is no way you could have known what a lasting impression that statement would make in my life. So many times I have returned to that moment for reassurance. I wish every eleven-year-old girl had someone like you to tell her she is beautiful. As the years passed, you continued to be there for me. You taught me about ministry. You taught me about giving. You would tell people you had a son and a daughter. I cannot express how much that meant to me now even more than it did then. I am not sure there was ever a time you did not hug me and tell me you loved me. You were always telling your loved ones how much they meant to you. It broke our hearts to say goodbye, but I can assure you of this – we all knew you loved us. No one had to wonder. Lately, I feel more compelled than ever to let my loved ones know how much I care about them. We think our family and friends will live forever. Sometimes, we do not realize how special they are until we are forced to say goodbye. I constantly tell our readers to live life with no regrets and, yet, I foolishly allowed so much time to pass between visits. Maybe that is where my tears are coming from? Knowing I wasted so many opportunities to thank you, spend time with you, and tell you I love you. Life should never get that busy. I am sorry, Daddy 2. I am so sorry. I rest in the hope that I will have eternity to say what I need to say. The last time you saw my Mom, you told her to tell me that you loved me. I love you too, Daddy 2. I can hear you saying it now in your own special way. We sure do miss you here as we wait for eternity. We would not wish you back from such paradise, but our hearts still ache. You left behind a legacy. Happy 59th Birthday in Heaven. What a blessing to know you are in the arms of our Savior. Until we meet again, I love you, I thank you, and I miss you.

Dear Thomas Patrick, On the occasion of your Confirmation I wish to offer the sage and time-honored advice of a saint. Ambrose, a bishop and theologian from the 4th century. His words are worthy of repeating here. My prayer for you, as your Godmother and Sponsor, would be that your reception of this important sacrament would mirror the words of St. Guard what you have received. God the Father has marked you with his sign; Christ the Lord has confirmed you and has placed his pledge, the Spirit, in your hearts. It will have many effects. Your Confirmation roots you more deeply as a son of God, and it strengthens your prayer to "Our Father," the same Father in Heaven that you can call "Abba" as Jesus did, or "Daddy. Remember that Jesus was called the Son of God, right? By the gift of grace, in and through your baptism long ago, you were made a child of God too. Now your sonship is being taken to a new level. In Confirmation, you, the beloved son, will give your own "yes" to God in and through your Profession of Faith in the Creed. And moments later you will receive the next measure of grace that Our Father wants to pour out on you. You will be marked with a sign—the bishop will use holy oil to anoint your head. And as he does, God will anoint your soul with an indelible mark that can never be erased. You belong to Him. The gifts of the Holy Spirit that Ambrose talks about will not only strengthen your identity as a Catholic, they will give you new power to be a Christian—not in name only—but in word and deed. For the gifts of the Spirit empower you to be a witness for Christ in your family, among your peers, and wherever you go in the world. My prayer is that you take St. Ambrose at his word and guard what you have received. God has already provided you with the graces and strength of this sacrament to weather storms of doubt, confusion, frustration, or heartache. Call on God and rely on Him when these times come. Ambrose is a saint for a reason. For years Ambrose fought heresy against his fellow Catholics—a very hard predicament! Yet he never resorted to violence. Ambrose fought for truth and against corruption in the culture of his day, standing up for God and ransoming Christians who suffered imprisonment. He used his intellectual gifts and his communication skills. He left a legacy of faith and reason and a life worthy of the calling he had received. Thomas, you will receive much more than will be visible at Confirmation. Trust God and stay close to him. He is very close to you. With love, from your Godmother, Auntie Pat.
