He throws his book at her. Is that the problem, or is he allergic to milk products? Treatment for Allergies Conventional western medicine diagnoses allergies with skin tests and blood analysis. Treatment by desensitization, using injections of allergenic substances over extended periods of time, is effective in some cases. Drugs such as antihistamines and steroids can alleviate symptoms. The only sure and completely effective option is total avoidance of the substance. Abstinence, of course, does not correct the underlying problem. Integrating my training in applied kinesiology, chiropractic, acupuncture and nutrition provided the knowledge I needed. I learned to diagnose and treat allergies with energy-balancing techniques from kinesiology and oriental medicine. Finally, this approach brought relief for me and my son. Unaware of this repulsion, we often go near allergens and interact with their energies. The repulsion can be detected by MRT. However, if he is allergic to milk products, that left arm will noticeably weaken when he holds a piece of cheese in his right hand, where highly sensitive sensory receptors pick up its disruptive energy and communicate danger to his brain. MRT is subtle and requires considerable practice, but once mastered it can be used to detect adverse reactions to any substance, and even to feelings and thoughts. Using MRT, I locate blockages in his electrical circuits, or acupuncture meridians, caused by his allergy to milk. Then when I reconnect or reopen these circuits in the presence of dairy products, his brain learns to respond differently. I continue until his MRT is strong, indicating that dairy products no longer cause stress in his system. He will assimilate nutrients appropriately from all foods. With efficient communication between the brain and body restored, his system will work naturally to promote healthy development. The substance must be completely avoided for 25 hours following treatment and is then permanently neutralized. If the child has exceptionally high sensitivity, we repeat the process. One of my clients reported eating a whole box of chocolate covered cherries after treatment for chocolate without the slightest hint of her former problems. Broad Benefits My diagnostic and treatment techniques have proved successful with allergy-based respiratory, circulatory, gastrointestinal, genito-urinary, dermatological, and musculo-skeletal conditions and addictions. Most importantly, they also eliminate the symptoms of AD H D and autism in most children. Say Good-Bye to Autism to inform and educate people.
