Discovering the Taj Mahal India India: Discovering the Taj Mahal This mausoleum is so iconic that it borders on cliché. Published on 27th June Taj Mahal through a decorative stone archway. He chops at one wrist with his other hand to illustrate his point. Behind me in the queue, a woman tuts audibly. He gouged out their eyes! Over years have passed since Mughal emperor Shah Jahan built a mausoleum for his beloved wife. But when it comes to the Taj Mahal, the rumour mill is still grinding. A battle between indignation and politeness plays out across his features. Only love could have built such a place. They charge across the tin roofs, making a noise that sounds like thunder. We take our time approaching the sandstone Chowk-i-Jilo Khana gatehouse, pretty enough in itself to be the main event. But my mind is elsewhere. Will it feel familiar? Framed in the dim, rust-red, arched gateway is an otherworldly vision. White minarets, balconies, onion domes and golden finials sing to each other against a pale sky. I move forward into the light. Verdant lawns and dark poplars are divided by turquoise water channels and glassy pools. After the decline of the Mughals, the Taj was looted and fell into a bad state, until Lord Curzon restored it in the early s. Nishant rubs his palms together and begins. It was love at first sight, he tells me. He had other wives, but sired only one child with each. At her insistence, he commuted death sentences and pardoned enemies. Court writers spoke of her beauty and wisdom. And when her husband went to war, she went with him. It was in the Deccan Plateau, where he was fighting a campaign, that she died in childbirth. His hair turned grey overnight. Inside the Taj Mahal, daylight filters through lofty lattice windows onto two rectangular cenotaphs: Mumtaz in the centre and Shah Jahan beside her. The tombs are encircled by an exquisite marble jaali screen inlaid with floral pietra dura mosaics in semi-precious stones. Nishant singles out a small poppy motif: We pass out onto the north side of the platform upon which the Taj stands. A thousand elephants carried the marble from Rajasthan! Such a feat will never be seen again. In the end, its vast expense cost Shah Jahan his throne, Nishant tells me. Shortly after its completion, the emperor was replaced by his son, Aurangzeb. Taj Tips Be guided. Visitors are not permitted to enter with guidebooks or food although water is included in the ticket price of Rs. The Taj Mahal is open sunrise to sunset every day except Friday. Of the three gates, the queues are shortest at the south entrance. Entry is capped at people so buy tickets the day before. Make a day of it. The ticket gives discounted entry to other sights on the same day, including the nearby Red Fort and Fatehpur Sikri, 28 miles south west of the city.

For these local boys, summer has transformed a trusty wooden boat into their makeshift diving board. Sourangshu Gupta Want to cheat your way through summer? Nothing does the trick like packing your bags and dashing off to Darjeeling? Lovingly monikered The Queen of Hills, it is here that you can see the milky peak of Kangchenjunga, Rhododendron-dotted mountain paths, and steam engines that look straight out of storybooks. Nishant Chawla For birders, the warm, activity-filled summer days are perfect for studying nesting behaviour. But even as an amateur, patient observation can fetch you rare glimpses. Case in point, the beautiful sight of this adult White-throated kingfisher feeding skink kill to its fledgling in a village near Thiruvanthapuram. Mohan G Watching a cuddly dog shake off water is a sight endearing enough to bust a bad mood. This water baby seems to be having a playful wash at Calangute Beach in Goa, so much so that he refuses to step out. Parikshit Madhukar If you were planning a productive summer holiday, chances are the Olive Ridley turtles have already beat you to it. This is the season when the small species of turtle, found abundantly in warm tropical waters, have their eggs hatching in the sun-baked shores of many Indian coastal areas, including Odisha. At the Podampetta beach, the early morning sun lends a magical quality to the phenomenon, as newborn Ridelys scurry back into the safety of the Bay of Bengal to avoid being eaten by land predators. Nishand Venugopal If summer were a boogiemer, seaside wind and water would fight it away in a heartbeat. Rajshree Suryawanshi Gujarat and summer both conjure an image of wild ruggedness, and at the Gir National Park, wild is beautiful. With the forest under heat attack, birds and animals wander out to drink from waterholes. While the deer herd here seems to believe in getting down to business, this lone peafowl does not mind a proud post-preening strut. But to see flocks of blackbuck spar and frolic in open sun-kissed grasslands, summers are ideal. Nidhi Upadhyay The backwaters of Kerala offer pockets of lush freshness even in sizzling summers. Lake Vembanad in Kumarakom is a case in point, and cruising on its soothing waters in a rustic boat is perhaps one of the best ways to cool off. Keyur Panchal Making a splash gets a whole new meaning in summer, when neighbourhood ponds and pools become playground for many. But this young boy swings big as he dives into the cool waters of the Arabian Sea, a refreshing evening escape amid the urban jungle of Mumbai. Paresh Mahadev Kanade A lazy camel ride on the beach can spell the perfect summer plan, if you are not quite the water-baby. Wind and waves at a comfortable distance, the sun overhead does not seem to bother these amblers at Mandvi Beach in Gujarat. Siddhant Arya Fringed by the formidable Himalayas, Losar is the last inhabitable settlement along the Indo-China border. Besides its proximity to an international border and dizzying altitude, many travellers stop by to visit the solo monastery and observe the everyday life here, en route to Chandratol, a lake as still and gorgeous as the moon. Debarup Mukherjee During scorching summer months, watering holes are the best bets to spot wildlife. Here, a tiger satiates his thirst in Ranthambore National Park. A traditional Indian summer drink, it is best enjoyed cold. Rajan Mittal Photographers sometimes stand by endlessly, braving harsh weather, in their quest for that perfect shot. To capture this pair of breeding Blue-tailed bee-eaters, he waited for several hours by the banks of River Damodar, in Bardhaman, West Bengal. Soumik Biswas The best kind of summer mornings are those that begin with a walk on the beach. Navin Paul Harsh summer months are best to spot wildlife, say enthusiasts. The landscape is arid, and water pools most frequented. The wait is worth it though, when you get a glimpse of the prowling tiger amid the yellow grass. Jayant Nimje Longer hours of daylight during the summer months often brings friends together for a good game in the open. Here the Marina Beach in Chennai provides the perfect playground for a windy, watery match of volleyball. Armed with a bamboo raft and traditional fishing net, he is trying his luck. Abhisek Saha Ever wondered what the seasons mean for the dwellers of the wild? The pop of colour this peacock brings to the backdrop of dry saal trees in the Kanha National Park in Madhya Pradesh only stokes the imagination. Daksha Bapat Few things are as fun as frolicking in the summer sea – with heat and humidity close on your heels, the waves look more inviting than ever. And what better way to beat the heat than with friends? These young boys are making the most of the Malpe Beach in Udupi. Summer is here, and we are looking for photos from across India that showcase the best of what it represents. A panoramic shot of a misty hill station or a technicoloured beach? Portraits of children licking ice lolly? The respite that carts peddling coconut water and nimbu pani offer in the blistering heat? Despite the perspiration, there is plenty to take shine to this time of the year, many magical moments to capture. In addition, a monthly winner will be selected by our in-house photo experts. Feel free to experiment with moods and subjects; we like unusual and striking points of view. So send us your favourite photos of structures that make an impact along with detailed information about where the picture was taken and what is happening in the photo.
