Remembering Khasruzzaman Chowdhury What the Bangladeshi community got? A lot of fun, utility and sense of belonging. Thousands of Bangladeshi community members converged at the book fair in three days. There were book, food, cloth, jewelry, art, not-for-profit business vendors at the event. Cloth and food sellers were busy almost all the time. People browsed and bought books from 17 participating booksellers. People also talked to authors, took pictures, enjoyed music and dance, listened to discussions, met friends and families, exchanged greetings. The most popular attraction “ the cultural event in the evening ” was full of audience. It was a great festival atmosphere. Bangladeshi children, from 5 to 16 years, competed in five categories and won prizes. Tight Schedule Although most of the Bangladeshi community members attended in the evening to enjoy cultural programs, the organizers have filled two days with lots of events. Sunday was even more tightly filled, 23 events were scheduled from To finish all the events the organizers had to keep a tight grip on timing. In some segments, moderators literally pressed speakers to finish their talk in seconds “ which is an utterly impossible task for Bangladeshi people. Bangla language needs other languages to spread its root Room for Improvement Bangladeshi community in New York truly enjoys the Bangla book fair a great deal. It is especially popular among the first generation Bangladeshis and their families. It brings back memory and nostalgia of Ekushey Book Fair in crowded Dhaka city. Muktadhara Foundation has worked tirelessly to organize the annual showcase of Bangla literary works from Bangladesh, India and beyond. However, the Bangla book fair can be improved substantially in content and management. Aside from previous suggestions , here are some more recommendations: Other ethnic communities were curious about the event but had no clue what was going on? Displaying signs in Spanish, Arabic, Korean, Chinese language could have been a great idea! Displaying signs in Spanish, Arabic, Korean, Chinese language could have been a great idea. Book fair can be more diversified by adding more interesting and modern ideas. The event was filled with too many items related to song, dance, Rabindranath and Nazrul. Some discussion on blogging, filmmaking, spreading science, making a podcast, utilizing technology, using social media, reading e-books could have been added. There was even no discussion about blogging or bloggers! Young second generation Bangladeshi writer participation was almost none. In recent years, some non-resident Bangladeshi writers are actively writing: Actually, only a few photos were posted online after the event, nothing else! Organizers can improve the image and management of Bangla book fair by collecting comments, suggestions, recommendations from the visitors suggestion box! There was no way to give any feedback on the event onsite! Bangladeshi community in New York can help improve the image, the quality and the direction of Bangla book festival by engaging more into the process in future.
