The Grand Opera House, a performing arts center of Mercer University, is Central Georgia's premier historic theatre with nationally-touring Broadway, comedy, concerts, and more.

He selected the Richardsonian Romanesque style and chose red sandstone and Dubuque brick for construction. The 1, seat auditorium included 2 balconies, 8 boxes and stalls and a proscenium large enough to host major theatrical productions. For the next 28 years the greatest names of American and European show business performed at the Grand including: A young Henry Fonda played Hamlet on our stage in Touring Broadway shows were always popular. For several years the Grand Stock Company produced a new play every week. A legendary production of Ben Hur featured live horses and chariots on a treadmill. The Garden of Allah featured a large cast, an Arabian orchestra, plus camels, donkeys and a sandstorm created on stage. Between and the Grand hosted more than 2, live performances. In with live theater receipts diminishing and film revenues on the rise a decision was made to convert the Grand into a full time movie house. The second balcony and glamorous box seats and stalls were removed. The fly space for scenery above the stage was closed off and the orchestra area covered over to make room for more seating. A massive air ventilation system filled the rehearsal area and dressing rooms on the lower level. Two large fireproof projection rooms replaced the 2nd floor dressing rooms and hallway to the 2nd balcony. For 58 years Dubuque enjoyed the best of Hollywood from the same stage where the greats of live theater once performed. A marquee typical of the era was added in the s. A barbershop occupied a section of what is now the restored main lobby. In it was closed and remained vacant, but not for long. For several months hundreds of volunteers worked thousands of hours to renovate the building to make it useable again for live productions. On the evening of August 14, , 96 years after the original opening night, the new Grand Opera House reopened to an enthusiastic audience with the musical Tintypes. Live theater had returned to The Grand. In the Board of Directors launched another campaign to complete renovation and accurately restore the building to the look of the s. The architectural firm of Straka & Johnson was hired to design and supervise the restoration. Donations large and small came from hundreds of area residents, companies and corporations. To increase our handicap accessibility a glass elevator was added to the building in And that summer, the Dubuque Academy of Ballet moved their office and rehearsal space to the 3rd and 4th floor of the Grand. In a significant bequest from the estate of Ervin and Alice Hafeman allowed us to restore the orchestra area that had been closed off since Musicians now will perform on a level about 6 feet lower than the main floor auditorium, providing super acoustics for musicals and unobstructed sight for persons sitting in the first few rows of seats. The Grand Opera House Foundation, a non-profit corporation owns this magnificent facility. A board of directors provides guidance to our paid staff and a large roster of dedicated volunteers. Funding is provided principally by ticket sales, plus an annual campaign, show sponsorships, playbill ad sales and rentals.

Two Marc Chagall painted murals, framed in large windows of the grand tier lobby, give the opera house an especially distinct look. While the original opera house opened in at 39th Street and Broadway, it has been at its current location since After more than fifty seasons, it still retains the quintessential Manhattan glamour and mid-century modern elegance. Each night, audience members are treated to an experience unmatched by other opera houses. Cluster-shaped chandeliers, their crystals aglow, begin to ascend toward the high ceiling overhead. This signals that the performance is about to start. The most stellar voices in the pantheon of opera have been, and continue to be, regulars at the Metropolitan Opera House. And today, Placido Domingo, the irrepressible and unchallenged opera superstar of our time, carries forth this legacy. Unquestionably there are many marvelous opera houses in the world, but the Metropolitan Opera House remains the gold standard. Metropolitan Opera Guild Information: The Metropolitan Opera Guild was started during the Great Depression by philanthropist Eleanor Robson Belmont, who had a vision to create a guild that would support the world of opera, and donate its proceeds to the Metropolitan Opera. Membership to it is a fantastic way to support the arts and the Met. For these seats, however, there is no view of the stage. Outside the Opera House: Met Opera on Demand is a streaming service that brings the opera right into your living room. Seven-day free trials are available. There are plenty of fantastic dinner options nearby Lincoln Center. We recommend a stop in P. Founded in , it is an old-school New York institution with great food, and a well-stocked bar. It also happens to be across the street from the Metropolitan Opera House. Anyone with a ticket can dine there, and it opens two hours before a performance begins. One can also reserve a table for the duration of the evening. Dinner can be enjoyed before the performance; and tea and dessert during the intermission. Another restaurant within walking distance three blocks to the theater is the excellent French restaurant, Le Boite en Bois. It is quiet, cozy, and authentic, and it has a set pre-theatre menu. The Lincoln Ristorante is a modernist and chic establishment located at Lincoln Center, situated directly beside the reflecting pool and the Henry Moore sculpture. The menu, conceived by world-class chef Jonathan Benno, promises delectable and modern Italian cuisine, with ingredients either grown by local farmers and purveyors; or imported directly from Italy. This is the perfect spot to ensure a successful evening out in Manhattan, as well as a comfortable walk to the opera house. Columbus Circle is also walking distance away, and there are plenty of good eats there, too. Also there is the Center Bar, a relaxing lounge at the Time Warner Center, where one can relax before a performance and enjoy a stunning view of Central Park. The best way to reach the opera house from Grand Central Terminal is to take the shuttle to the uptown 1 train, and get off at 66th Street. Lincoln Center is on Broadway at 64th Street. For easy parking, there are numerous parking garages nearby. If one looks them up in advance, there are usually discounts available online. Standing-room tickets can be purchased in the morning, on the day of the performance. Tickets begin to sell at 10am, and can be bought at the box office, online or by telephone. The Rush Ticket Program is a great way to get discounted tickets. Previously, tickets were sold using a lottery program, but now tickets are sold first-come-first-serve, online. There is also a student rush program. Student Discount tickets, for students 29 and under, can also be purchased same-day of the performance, beginning at 10am. However, these seats do provide excellent views of the orchestra pit!
