Each of us has those few special stories that bring us right back to our childhood, those few books that will always hold a special place in our hearts. Maybe it was the way they were read to us, animated and excitedly, or perhaps it was the illustrations with their vivid colors and images that we thought only our imaginations could create. At Twin Cities Kids Club we love books, and we encourage parents to read with their children. Reading with your children classic stories that you loved as a child is a precious opportunity for you and your child to make memories that will last a lifetime. These Wild Things love Max dearly, and they spend their days and nights together creating a ruckus and having a grand time. Eventually, Max decides that he misses home and travels back to his room to find his dinner waiting for him. We think this is one classic that every kid will love to read. The illustrations are exciting and vivid, and the story itself is sincere and endearing. The mouse asks the boy for a cookie and hilarity ensues. We love this classic because it is not only enjoyable for children, but for parents as well. The tiny mouse represents something we know all too well as parents, the endless request of our children. Seuss- We love this book because it is just so much fun to read out loud! The exciting world of Dr. Seuss has never failed to captivate children. The endless rhymes and the fun adventures through an unimaginable world make this story a true classic in our book. Our favorite part of this intriguing book is the way it builds up and winds down so smoothly. As the boy grows, he asks more and more of the tree, eventually turning her into nothing more than a stump. The tree loves the boy unconditionally and gladly gives him all that she has. This classic taught us about friendship and compassion for others. Young Madeline finds herself in the hospital one night and has to have emergency surgery. Her friends encourage her through her recovery, bringing her flowers and a get well wishes. We love this book for its simple and bright pictures and its encouraging and uplifting message. We are all worth loving, no matter our condition. Corduroy, a sweet and gentle teddy bear, finds his perfect match in a young girl who sees him for who he truly is, a great friend. Longing to become a real bunny, the Velveteen Rabbit waits patiently for the love of a child to bring him to life. One fateful night he is gifted to a boy whose love does just that. White- This tale of Wilbur the spring pig, his loving owner Fern and the most endearing spider literature has ever known has been touching the hearts of young readers for more than 50 years. Your children will love reading about life on a farm and animals loving and caring for one another. Children and parents alike have loved this classic book since its release in This book also contains several short stories that chronicle the adventures of Rat and Mole, providing endless humor and life lessons for your children.

I sighed as I dragged my cursor over to the link, knowing full well what awaited me, a little thread of sadness knotting in my stomach. I try to speak quickly as I walk them to the long table near the window, laden with time-worn favorites: You know, there are some wonderful new authors and illustrators I could show you. Have you heard of Oliver Jeffers? Sean Qualls was here just last week! I snatch a few of my favorites from the other tables, not too many, afraid to overwhelm. I thought, hope rising. Which made it all the more dismaying to see the same old familiar faces gathered once again to receive praise. The Wild Rumpus is still in vogue? Must we bid the Moon Goodnight once more? Surely piling on one more commendation will fell The Giving Tree! Soft colors meet eerie figures with wide-set, jet black eyes in a wonder-land where common words or phrases find more poignant definition. Dragons love to crunch on tacos, just like you and me! Part of the early fun of Summer is trying to create your own story for this bizarre place, how action can be so absurdly related to outcome. But as the vignettes progress we watch the two boys go from partners in crime to strained, jealous, hostile. A terrible fight ensues followed by what seems like eons of silence before forgiveness is found and love remembered. By Karen Hesse and Jon J Muth In a parched and baking urban landscape, a young girl implores the sky for relief, and the result when it arrives is pure joy. A little moment in time that seems to capture something pure and lovely and about the mother-daughter relationship. A boy and his toy boat visit the lake every day. But one day high winds rise and the boat is swept away on a suddenly ferocious sea. Stricken, the boy decides to set out after it, leading to a harrowing and thrilling chase across the roiling waves. Like the art of Chris Van Allsburg, the fine details of these pictures make the world come alive. One hardly knows what to be more excited about here: Colorful and sweet, this tale of creativity and perseverance will delight parents and daughters alike. Expect to be asked to read this one night after night. A bedtime poem for families to cherish together. Maps By Aleksandra Mizielinska This is a book of maps. But this is so much more than a book of maps. At the bookstore where I work we order it by the case and still cannot keep it in stock. A book kids and adults can pour over together, finding new details every time. In Swinster Pharmacy, two children ponder nature and existence of an entirely ordinary pharmacy that sits in a town next to theirs. Written as a list, the verses range from comical: Rumors around town say there are four secrets about the Swinster Pharmacy, but no one knows what any of them are. The Swinster Pharmacy is not perfect. The glow of the moon on the car, there, is not perfect. A book to be read again and again as different meanings emerge. For his genius certainly, but he was also a man of wit, a man of philosophy, a man aware of his own shortcomings and mis-steps. In On a Beam of Light, we meet young Albert, an eccentric boy, even a little odd, whose mind is filled with questions about the world around him: By what rules does his bike go flying down the hill, filling him with joy? A tender portrait of a small boy whose ideas would one day crack open the universe, Light encourages creativity, originality, and wonder. The Dot By Peter H. Reynolds Even for children, the uber-imaginative among us, the blank white page can hold a lot of intimidation. With a little push from her teacher, Vashti jabs her paper with a marker, a frustrated little splotch of ink welling up in its center. Allowing yourself to just follow your creativity, wherever it leads can lead to remarkable things. A lesson we could all use from time to time in letting go of your own self-judgements so inspiration can shine, The Dot makes artists of us all. Have You Seen My Dragon? Black and white line drawings, punctuated with bursts of color perfectly capture the beauty and chaos of the city, both in fine detail and wide panorama. Young readers will love spotting the sneaky dragon on each page as the wandering boy prompts them to count the purple busses and tasty hot dogs. Having just left her home country, Unhei is worried about attending an American elementary school. So on the first day of school, Unhei tells her classmates that she has not yet chosen a name for herself. Eager to help, her classmates fill a jar with suggestions: Laura, Amanda Suzy, Unhei tries them all, but none are quite right. On decision day, the jar of names mysteriously goes missing. With the encouragement of all her new friends, Unhei instead decides to keep the name she was born with, and teaches her classmates its pronunciation. A warm, lovely story about acceptance and honoring our cultures. On the Wing By David Elliott and Becca Stadtlander Orioles and humming birds, flamingos and crows, birds both common an exotic are made majestic in this poetic aviary. Whimsical and informative, the autumnal, nostalgic tone of On The Wing makes for a timeless favorite. Once Upon an Alphabet By Oliver Jeffers For those of us who have known and adored Oliver Jeffers and his squiggly little figures for some time, the arrival of this glowingly red volume felt like a landmark event. In Alphabet he continues in a similar spirit, giving us a short story for each letter of the alphabet: Cast in a subdued color palate, A Lion in Paris follows a lion who tires of the ennui of life in the savanna and travels to Paris in search of excitement. While he may have been king of the grasslands, in Paris he is swallowed by the hustle and bustle, just another face in the crowd. The city splendor grows dim as loneliness takes hold. But as with many before him, in time the lion finds joy in himself as he walks the streets of Paris alone. Somber, yet playful and sweet, A Lion in Paris stands proudly as a philosophical emotional complex work for children. A young girl locks eyes with a portrait of old Honest Abe and finds herself enthralled, and determines to learn more about this commanding figure. From his humble log cabin beginnings to his tragic death, Kalman punctuates the monumental acts of the man with the quirks and anecdotes that made him human. As much a pleasure to read as it is to simple gaze upon, Looking at Lincoln delivers spark and personality. Then out of nowhere: A giant gob of jelly plops down in the middle of his two-dimensional word.
