It was easy for me to buy the pro-life position: So by the time I was pregnant with my first child, I was so desperately grateful I could not understand how anyone could refuse the call to motherhood. If you are a Catholic woman, to be a mother is perhaps the highest role to which one can aspire. The church glorifies motherhood but nothing prepared me for the real experience of pregnancy. Advertisement To be pregnant is not to withdraw into feminine serenity and perfect maternal wisdom. It is be at once fearfully vulnerable and wonderfully powerful. I felt like God: Every woman is, with God and a little help from fathers - the co-creator of the life that will be. Believers of all faiths have a conviction that we are more than matter. Human beings are both, and with God, we imbue developing life with both body and spirit. But spirit can not be coerced. Spirit like love itself may only be given freely. I began to think about women who found themselves called to motherhood in dis-spiriting circumstances. Women who, unlike me, had not been in secure relationships, or were in bad or abusive relationships. Women too financially stretched; women abused; women whose spirits are weakened by circumstances. If a woman finds herself unable to offer her potential child the gift of spirit then logically, the child will be formed in the womb with a spirit that is diminished. When my first baby, a beautiful, perfect girl, was born I returned to my studies to complete a course in Ethics. Our tutor was a very well known ethicist and a marvellously skilled teacher. At a mid morning break, I proudly showed photographs of my miraculous, wonder-filled child. Our lecturer did not even feign interest: A couple of fellow students, older nurses and midwives, looked on. I silently asked my question. What you produced is nothing. Advertisement This was my first inkling that the pro life position was about more than protecting the unborn. For my lecturer, the not-yet-born are primarily important as a proposition to be defended, an argument in favour of of an ethical position, a precedent to be protected. This attitude is writ large in the anti choice movement. For them, the unborn - because they represent an Ultimate Principle - must have even more human rights than the already-born. But when do you hear the pro-life activist protesting against the murder of little Iraqi children by Australian bombs? When do you see them agitating for increased resources to avoid the scandalously high mortality rates amongst Aboriginal infants? When do you hear them agitating for greater economic equity for poorer families, for whom the endless, dis-spiriting financial struggle is the direct cause of a significant number of abortions? You do not hear any of this from the anti choice camp: We are not simply humicribs on legs. Our spirits matter as much as our bodies: As my first girl grows into a young woman so wonderful and surprising only God could have imagined her, I know in my heart she is as she is because I wanted her so much. She is smart, and loving. I trust her to know when and in what circumstances she is ready to pass on that Spirit to a child of her own. Sorrowfully, reluctantly, ambivalently - yes.
