If you are a gumbo expert and just want a recipe, feel free to scroll to the bottom. While this was still in the recipe testing phase, I read pretty much everything on the topic. The roux in this recipe requires extra special love and care and so I really suggest using a dutch oven or a heavy bottom pot. The Mise En Place: Chopping while browning the roux is a big no no, so I highly, highly, highly suggest getting the chopping, measuring, and having all ingredients ready to go before you start making the roux. Trust me on this, it will make your life so much easier. For best results, I suggest: You can use corn, canola, or vegetable. You need something that can really withstand the heat and the longer cooking time. Okay, so yes, this needs a total of minutes of constant stirring and constant attention. The stages of the roux: This is the most basic type of roux that we make. The roux is nice and light and usually requires just a quick 30 seconds -1 minute of browning the flour. This reminds me of the color of tahini paste. The color of homemade peanut butter. I stopped my roux here at 21 minutes exactly because I still wanted a little thickness to the gumbo and a deep-dark roux is an acquired taste. It will thicken the dish just enough and the flavor will be well pronounced without overpowering. Red brown in color and is darker than peanut butter. I was afraid I might have scared you off! From then on making gumbo will be a breeze. Possibly even a midweek affair? Oh, one two more things! A pot full of this stuff was slow simmering last Friday, all morning long. For lunch the hubby and I ate like kings and queens and it really made me miss the short time we spent in the French Quarter a couple of years back.

The rhythm sections of these bands substitute the string bass for the tuba and the guitar for the banjo. Musically, the Chicagoans play in more of a swing-style 4-to-the-bar manner. The New Orleanian preference for an ensemble sound is deemphasized in favor of solos. Chicago-style dixieland also differs from its southern origin by being faster paced, resembling the hustle-bustle of city life. Chicago-style bands play a wide variety of tunes, including most of those of the more traditional bands plus many of the Great American Songbook selections from the s by George Gershwin , Jerome Kern , Cole Porter , and Irving Berlin. It started out as a backlash to the Chicago style, which is closer in development towards swing. Dutch "Old-style jazz"[ edit ] Largely occurring at the same time as the "New Orleans Traditional" revival movement in the United States , traditional jazz music made a comeback in the Low Countries. However, most Dutch jazz bands such as The Ramblers had long since evolved into the Swing-era while the few remaining traditional jazz bands such as the Dutch Swing College Band did not partake in the broader traditional revival movement, and continued to play ragtime and early jazz, greatly limiting the number of bands aspiring jazz musicians could join or as they were using instruments unavailable to most Dutch musicians such as double basses and the piano were forced to improvise, resulting in a new form of jazz ensemble generally referred to "Oude Stijl" "Old Style" jazz in Dutch. Influenced by the instrumentation of the two principal orchestral forms of the wind band in the Netherlands and Belgium , the " harmonie " and the " fanfare ", traditional Dutch jazz bands do not feature a piano and contain no stringed instruments apart from the banjo. They include multiple trumpets , trombones and saxophones accompanied by a single clarinet , sousaphone and a section of Marching percussion usually including a washboard. The music played by Dutch jazz bands includes both the original New Orleans tunes, as well as the songs of the revival era. In terms of playing style, Dutch jazz bands occupy a position between revivalist and original New Orleans jazz, with more solos than the latter but without abandoning the principle of ensemble playing. With the average band containing up to players, Dutch jazz bands tend to be the largest ensembles to play traditional jazz music. John Storm Roberts states that the musical genre habanera, "reached the U. With Gottschalk, we see the beginning of serious treatment of Afro-Caribbean rhythmic elements in New World art music. For the more than quarter-century in which the cakewalk, ragtime, and proto-jazz were forming and developing, the habanera was a consistent part of African American popular music. It is reasonable to assume that tresillo-based rhythms were performed in Congo Square by Caribbean slaves. There are examples of tresillo-like rhythms in a few African American folk musics such as the foot stomping patterns in ring shout and the post-Civil War drum and fife music. Now in one of my earliest tunes, "New Orleans Blues," you can notice the Spanish tinge. Library of Congress Recording. Buddy Bolden, the first known jazz musician, is credited with creating the big four, the first syncopated bass drum pattern to deviate from the standard on-the-beat march. Some survived, others were discarded as the Europeanization progressed. It may also account for the fact that patterns such as [tresillo have]. As time went on, there was more improvising. The presence of marching bands lives on today in The Big Easy, with musicians such as the Marsalis family doing some of their earliest work in such bands. In the late 19th century marching bands would often march through the streets of the city in second line parades. The Onward and Olympia bands each have sustained incarnations that continue performing to this day. Modern examples of the brass band tradition can be heard in the playing of groups like the Dirty Dozen Brass Band, or the Rebirth Brass Band led by trumpeter Kermit Ruffins. They perform at funerals, picnics, carnivals and parades. The relationship between jazz bands and brass bands is one of co-influence. In turn, the early jazz bands of New Orleans influenced the playing of the marching bands, who in turn began to improvise themselves more often. Again, yet another indication that jazz music is symbolic of freedom. After the Civil War they still battle against each other, and to those boys everything was Dixie and Dixieland as far as they were concerned. Those boys, they made that up. It was not a positive term for African-Americans, as its usage defined any area of the south where slaves had not yet received emancipation. Dixieland music can be defined in a number of ways, though its origin is to be found in New Orleans, present first in the music of King Oliver. It quickly spread north and became popularized along with the migration of southern blacks to areas like Chicago. Today the term is used in reference to the music, which provides a general description of any form of jazz that is derived from early New Orleans jazz. For instance, the first band to actually use the term in reference to the music in their name was the all-white Original Dixieland Band. This band played no small role in the coinage of the term dixieland in reference to jazz in New Orleans, though they were not the innovators of the music. The only true barrier this band broke was being the first to record New Orleans music, which happened in New York City of all places. It should be noted that despite the criticism Paul Barnes made about them, he also said that they had a "first class band". An early student of Dixieland was the young Louis Prima, as well as his older brother Leon, both of whom lived outside the French Quarter in a working-class neighborhood populated by Italian-American and African-American musicians. Into his early 20s, Louis Prima performed on trumpet and cornet throughout New Orleans before following in the path of his idol Armstrong, and moving North for career reasons, where he appeared at the Famous Door in New York City, eventually relocating to Las Vegas where, beginning in the mids, he regularly appeared with another New Orleans musician, saxophonist Sam Butera. Prominent musicians such as Fats Domino helped shape what was first widely known as "rhythm and blues", which was an important ancestor of rock and roll, if not the first form of the music. In addition to the local talent, early rockers from elsewhere recorded many of their early hits in New Orleans using bands of New Orleans musicians. On numerous recordings by Fats Domino, Little Richard and others, Bartholomew assigned this repeating three-note pattern not just to the string bass, but also to electric guitars and even baritone sax, making for a very heavy bottom. He recalls first hearing the figure "as a bass pattern on a Cuban disc"

Palmer On "Country Boy" I had my bass and drums playing a straight swing rhythm and wrote out that rumba bass part for the saxes to play on top of the swing rhythm.
