It was intended to tunnel through the mountain to meet up with some earlier workings in the Capertee Valley as mining conditions in the Capertee were regarded as being much better than in the Wolgan. However, mining difficulties and the generally low quality of the shale in this area meant that mining became concentrated on the No. Although construction of a tunnel linking the Wolgan Valley with the Capertee was proposed on numerous subsequent occasions, it was to remain an elusive dream. This mine was to provide most of the oil shale for the working life of Newnes. National Parks and Wildlife sign at Newnes The main works site was established in a sweeping bend on the south bank of the Wolgan River and extending up the adjacent talus hillside. These works consisted of retorts, various distillation areas, oil storage tanks and washers, plant for the refining of the various finished products, a power station, workshops, etc. They were built in a substantial manner, as attested by the extensive ruins that stand to this day. Although construction commenced in , it was not until that the initial stage was completed and the retorts charged for the first time. More ruins at the original Newnes Industrial Section A town, named after Sir George Newnes , the chairman of the Commonwealth Oil Corporation at the time, was established close to the mining leases. This railway is no longer in use and the rails have been removed. A tunnel on the railway has survived as the Newnes glow worm tunnel , which has become something of a tourist attraction. Camping Camping is available on both sides of the Wolgan River; only pit toilets are provided. Most of the camping is in the National Park, at no charge, so pets are not permitted. Wood should not be collected for wood fires. As of there was wood available from the Newnes Hotel. Information available from the former Newnes Hotel, which is open as a kiosk on most weekends. Walks and Hikes There are several great walks in the Newnes area excluding walking through the ruins. Many of the more famous walks include: Pipeline Pass - This is a medium to hard walk that goes from Newnes to the oil shale operations at Glen Davis. The pipeline track is very scenic and comes highly recommended. The walk takes around 10 hours and is normally completed as an overnight walk. Wolgan River to Rocky Creek. This route follows the Wolgan River downstream to Rocky Creek. The route is often hard to find in many places, however the walking grade is fairly moderate and most people can complete it in a full day return. Wolgan River to Annie Rowan Creek. Note that the track beyond Rocky Creek is mostly on the north side of the Wolgan River. Wildlife A variety of native wildlife can be observed in the vicinity of the Newnes campground. The amount of wildlife observed depends significantly upon whether someone has recently brought their dog into the campground, which is illegal. Examples are kangaroos , especially near dusk.
