In , Publick Occurrences was published in Boston, making it the first newspaper in the United States. Throughout the centuries, and especially the last 50 years with the advent of television broadcasts and the Internet, the status of newspapers has seen many changes. The role of a newspaper reporter has also been altered. The advance of telecommunications has allowed newspaper reporters to research, interview and report often without leaving their desks. These same technological advances are threatening the status of print newspapers. However, some readers still continue to enjoy the thrill of picking up the morning paper at the local newsstand or enjoying a print copy over a morning cup of coffee. Newspapers are not yet dead and the entry to a successful newspaper reporting career can still be fulfilling. To deal with the potential threats against print dailies and weeklies, newspaper reporters can work for online media or freelance for various publications. Newspaper Reporter Job Description Newspaper reporters may work for one print or online publication or work as a freelancer for various newspapers. Generally what they are responsible for covering is assigned to them by an editor, but they should also be able to pitch their own story ideas as well. Newspaper reporter jobs do not have consistent work hours; in some cases one might have to cover a story late at night or early in the morning depending on the deadline or when a news item breaks. Newspaper reporting involves researching background and interviewing sources before writing newspaper articles. In many cases, a newspaper reporter will be working on more than one assignment at a time and will have to learn to multitask. Writers for newspapers may have to arrange for photographs or take them themselves. For online newspapers, reporters may have to assist with website maintenance and social media promotions. Education and Training To become a newspaper reporter, start by getting a journalism degree. Sometimes there is competition for acceptance into such an educational program, so the more experience you gain before applying, such as volunteering for a high school or community newspaper, the better. As you pursue your journalism degree, constantly seek out experience as much as you can through completing internships and placements, writing for your university or college newspaper, developing a blog or writing for a local newsletter. If you are able to find a mentor, someone who has been working in the newspaper industry for some time, take advantage of this valuable opportunity. However, the same study predicted that small, local dailies will also survive. Their findings suggested that in addition to online media being a threat to print publications, younger generations teens and young adults in their 20s are also less interested in newspapers compared to older generations. In fact, working as a freelance newspaper reporter, for various print and online media, may be the most successful route to take. A freelancer who writes for newspapers, magazines and other media, both print and online, has the potential to make significantly more.

3: What does a News Reporter do?

A journalist is a person who collects, writes, or distributes news or other current information to the public. A journalist's work is called journalism. A journalist can work with general issues or specialize in certain issues.

Comments News reporters and correspondents also known as journalists , gather news and information to keep the public informed about important events. They obtain their information through a number of sources. These may include personal interviews, contacts, wire services news transmitted via satellite dishes , news briefings, and question-and-answer periods. A news reporter gathers and assembles this information to be relayed to the public. Newspapers, magazines, television and radio stations rely on news correspondents to keep their readers, viewers and listeners informed. What does a News Reporter do? News reporters play an active role in gathering information on current events. A large portion of their day is spent investigating news before sending it in as a story. Some work as correspondents in offices located far from head office. They are sent to the places that important events are likely to happen. The reporter compiles all the information needed to create a story and then edits the story to fit a specific news page or bulletin. A beat is a media term for the area or topic a journalist covers, like crime, politics, sports, business, etc. They may work in one or several beats at a time depending on the size of a news organization. Generally, there are two kinds of newspapers that reporters work for - dailies and weeklies. Reporters for dailies usually have less time to find and report the news. They may work in only one beat. Reporters for weeklies have more time to do their research and typically have to cover several beats at a time. They may take photographs for their stories in addition to their regular duties. Television and radio reporters usually have less time to write and edit than those in the newspaper department. The news is often broadcasted immediately after or during an event. Reporters in this area learn very quickly how to convert information they receive into news clips suitable for broadcasting. Find your perfect career Would you make a good news reporter? Take the free career test What is the workplace of a News Reporter like? The work of a news reporter is usually hectic. They are under great pressure to meet strict deadlines. This means doing whatever it takes to get a story written and edited on time. Some news reporters work in comfortable, private offices; others may work in large rooms filled with other reporters. In an even more hectic environment, some reporters are on scene trying to get a story while sirens and police or curious onlookers distract from the task at hand. This kind of work can also get dangerous as reporters cover wars, political uprisings, fires, floods, and other disasters. Reporters that work for a morning paper often work from late afternoon to midnight. Radio and television reporters are assigned to a day or evening shift. Magazine reporters usually work during the day. Reporters have to keep their days flexible in order to meet deadlines or follow breaking news. This kind of work demands long hours, irregular schedules, and some travel.

Roles[ edit ] A reporter is a type of journalist who researches , writes, and reports on information in order to present in sources , conduct interviews , engage in research, and make reports. Reporters may split their time between working in a newsroom and going out to witness events or interviewing people. Reporters may be assigned a specific beat or area of coverage. Depending on the context, the term journalist may include various types of editors , editorial writers, columnists , and visual journalists, such as photojournalists journalists who use the medium of photography. Journalism has developed a variety of ethics and standards. While objectivity and a lack of bias are of primary concern and importance, more liberal types of journalism, such as advocacy journalism and activism, intentionally adopt a non-objective viewpoint. This has become more prevalent with the advent of social media and blogs, as well as other platforms that are used to manipulate or sway social and political opinions and policies. These platforms often project extreme bias, as "sources" are not always held accountable or considered necessary in order to produce a written, televised or otherwise "published" end product. Nisbet, who has written on science communication , [2] has defined a "knowledge journalist" as a public intellectual who, like Walter Lippmann , David Brooks , Fareed Zakaria , Naomi Klein , Michael Pollan , Thomas Friedman , and Andrew Revkin , sees their role as researching complicated issues of fact or science which most laymen would not have the time or access to information to research themselves, then communicating an accurate and understandable version to the public as a teacher and policy advisor. In his best-known books, Public Opinion and The Phantom Public , Lippmann argued that most individuals lacked the capacity, time, and motivation to follow and analyze news of the many complex policy questions that troubled society. Nor did they often directly experience most social problems, or have direct access to expert insights. These limitations were made worse by a news media that tended to over-simplify issues and to reinforce stereotypes , partisan viewpoints, and prejudices. Organizations such as the Committee to Protect Journalists and Reporters Without Borders publish reports on press freedom and advocate for journalistic freedom. The "ten deadliest countries" for journalists since have been Iraq deaths , Philippines , Russia 77 , Colombia 76 , Mexico 69 , Algeria 61 , Pakistan 59 , India 49 , Somalia 45 , Brazil 31 and Sri Lanka Current numbers are even higher. The ten countries with the largest number of currently-imprisoned journalists are Turkey 95 , [6] China 34 , Iran 34 , Eritrea 17 , Burma 13 , Uzbekistan six , Vietnam five , Cuba four , Ethiopia four , and Sudan three. This applies especially to war reporters, but their editorial offices at home often do not know how to deal appropriately with the reporters they expose to danger. Hence, a systematic and sustainable way of psychological support for traumatized journalists is strongly needed. However, only little and fragmented support programs exist so far. Journalist and source relationship[ edit ] The relationship between a professional journalist and a source can be rather complex, a source can actually impact the direction of the article written by the journalist. Herbert suggests that the source often leads but journalists commonly object to this notion for two reasons: It signals source supremacy in news making. Journalists have typically favored a more robust, conflict model, based on a crucial assumption that if the media are to function as watchdogs of powerful economic and political interests, journalists must establish their independence of sources or risk the fourth estate being driven by the fifth estate of public relations".
