If he have the knowledge of a 70 year old in the body of a 5 year old he will be taken as a genius and rise faster trough the bureaucracy of the state. You can even make you setting a democracy and he will always rise to the presidency. Take Bush father and Bush son in US. Take Clinton husband and probably Clinton wife in US. Look at US and Brazilian senate and congress and you will see at high offices there is many sons and daughters of someone. Options A ritual to chose the next emperor. I saw a round table movie where the Excalibur was placed in a waterfall by Merlin with a mechanical device that will only release it if the sword was twisted in a specific way. Then, when he was certain that Arthur was his chosen, he hinted to him that he needed to twist the sword. On your setting you do not need to cheat, the kid emperor will know everybody, knows a lot about the bureaucracy of the state, knows about the skeletons on the closets. An ritual consisting in knowledge of the bureaucracy, secret rituals, administrative skill will always be won by your young emperor. Ramses II, started a sort of business school that was known as the "sons of the emperor" and declared that all of those kids are their sons and therefore eligible to the succession. Those kids was put on public offices all through Egypt and when the appointment was about proven efficiency. He actually appointed as successor one of his genetic sons, but the idea is interesting. Your emperor can appoint a kid of the school "sons of the emperor" as the successor. Of course he will appoint the kid he intends to take as host. And this may even have a religious meaning to him And this also serves as a backup, if he die unable to complete the ritual he will left good kid in control. The appointment can be kept secret. This also allows the emperor to appoint a new kid each few years since he does not know when he will have to perform the ritual. All of the above you can left the "will" out, and make the "sons of the emperor" school combined with a ritual. That way he will be selected. Say the truth without saying the truth, the emperor declares that had a vision where God said that his knowledge will be passed on to some kid on the realm. Hide resources the emperor can make strategic division of the knowledge and resources in the way only with his knowledge some resources and bureaucratic approvals can be done in able time. That way when he "dies" a crisis of massive proportion will start. Then, a decade latter as teenager he will begin to solve the crisis at local levels and rise up fast. In that case you probably will want the "emperor sit" be available though the crisis. That can be made by the religious claim that he will reincarnate and people needs to look for him like the lamas do. Or make the setting a democracy with the presidency with no real power, place the power in the figure of a super-secretary that can be appointed. Since he have privileged knowledge about passwords, cracks in the bureaucracy, persons, he probably will rise up quickly in a democracy. He will be first minister for almost entire life or reelected president or speaker of the house for almost entire life provided there is no limit on reelection. When the emperor rise everything is fine and people will not blame the bureaucracy and change it. They will blame the placeholder president. That is what will make the web of bureaucracy and mostly assures that anyone but the emperor will be able to make a good government. I much prefer the option 3 or option 6 because has historic elements that supports their credibility: I mean the perpetuation of family politicians and Ramses II child of emperor school. Those options allow for a good or evil emperor. The emperor can simple believe he is not killing the child, but merely giving his knowledge to the kid making he or she the right successor. Or that is an sacrifice for the good of the country. Option 3 also explains why he will live surrounded by children and why they will visit him on his death bed. The kid that was sacrificed may not even be the last to visit him. They can keep the body on life support or say he is in coma. The difficult thing is how the emperor lives to be 70 Half emperors in history died assassinated by their successors quest of power. The other half was killed because they become mad out of the fear of being killed by persons close to them I am exaggerating a bit here. Is difficult to believe an emperor will live to be years old. I think the democracy scenario is better suited for longer times because as an super-secretary he will not be target of house-of-cards and "et tu, brute? As the super-secretary he will be on the safest of the positions while retaining all power. And his different personas will be known by their skill in history. He can even survive a few coups and risen to power again. His country can change from an monarchy, to a communism and then to a democracy and he will still be on the highest offices. As an super-secretary known to have passion for the country, known to be critical to those above him when they made mistakes, he will probably be included in most coups. This can start on his first life. A coup can happen just before or shortly after his first reincarnation. Since he has no known sons, his new persona is not killed. But since he knows a lot about the state he became the primary advisor to the new government. Since he solved a lot of problems he become addicted to the feeling of starting over and be appraised as a genius kid.

2: Immortal Achievement in Ori and the Blind Forest

The title of another installment in The Bane Chronicles has been revealed. After we learned that the first installment in the story The Bane Chronicles is called What.

Achievement won on 15 Mar 15 TA Score for this game: Please log in to vote. For the most efficient use of your time I recommend doing all the difficult achievements in the same run. Immortal-No deaths , Elite-no abilities points used and Supersonic-complete game under 3 hours. For this reason I will be going over tips concerning all three achievements in this. First thing you need to understand is the generous save system makes what would otherwise be a couple very difficult achievements nothing more than an exercise in saved game management. There are 10 save slots in the main menu where you choose to continue your game use them and abuse them. The game allows you to copy and paste your current save between these 10 different save slots so During your play-through if you spend too much time because you do not know where to go next or you die simply use one of your copied saves to reload and try again until you are happy with how quick you got through a section. This is the key to doing all 3 achievements in one go. The following information MAY contain slight spoilers. I Recommend doing this after your initial playthrough of the game. The basic idea is to run through the story as quick as possible only taking extra time to gather nearby energy or life cells. However be sure to take the extra time needed to find all secrets and items in the areas which can not be revisited if possible. The three areas for main concern are the ginsa tree,misty woods and forlorn ruins each contain secret areas that cannot be gotten later, if youre going for the no stone unturned achievement as well be sure to get all these before you leave these areas. The Elite and no stone unturned achievement finding all secret locations seems to be bugged For this reason NEVER EVER spend points on abilities during the run or risk it not unlocking , You will also want to delete all previous saves and start as fresh as possible prior to attempting this run. I even uninstalled then reinstalled the game,I experienced the glitch doing these things worked for me. Also in the pause menu it shows your current playtime and next to that is your death counter , if ever your counter shows anything higher than zero go into your save game backups and reload the nearest save. It is wise to keep an eye on this during your game as sometimes autosaves can be very quick after a death. If you have spare energy cells Charged attacks will take down the enemies much faster than tapping. Getting extra energy cells is always worthwhile Specifically against the mini bosses that leap out of the ground and spit at you. They take awhile to kill until you get the bash ability. Starting at forlorn ruins enemies become increasingly more difficult for the no ability speed run, it is always quicker to dispatch enemies by using bash by holding to shoot their own projectiles back at them rather than using spirit flame tapping or wasting energy cells using charged flame holding. All these areas have secrets which cant be accessed again. Here I will list my playtimes at certain points in the game so you may better judge how you are doing overall. I will also list how many life cells and energy cells i found on the way though i missed many. At 11 min I had 1life cell and 1 energy cell at spirit well save point in hollow grove directly in front of spirit tree 30 min 2LC 3EC door before entering ginsa tree 42 min 2LC 4EC after completing ginsa tree and collecting all 4 secrets. Horu this is final area so be sure to make a few saves at this point so you can return and get the rest of the missing life cells,energy cells and hidden sections you may have missed on the general map. There is I believe 5 secrets inside the final area Mt. Again this achievement may be glitched for you until a patch. If you experience any glitches or bugs please email the developer at feedback moongamestudios. Thanks to smallywood for the email. Fifty years after the Jazz Age and the rise of the Hotel Dumort, immortal warlock Magnus Bane knows the Manhattan landmark is on the decline. The once-beautiful Hotel Dumort has fallen into a decayed thing, a ruin, as dead as a place can be.

Isaac and Miria freaked out a little bit when they figured it out seventy years later, but adjusted quickly and had a great time, for example, being Dollars. Casshern Sins All of the robots that want to eat Casshern are this trope. Luna herself enjoys eternity and is determined to make every robot in her presence share in it if they want. Casshern himself reconstructs the trope. Dance in the Vampire Bund: These are a minority among vampires but they exist. Generally, speaking there are two varieties: With just one feeling, a vampire can live forever. The Search for Vengeance: Marcus pines for Rome but, unlike Colin, he looks to the future because he believes he can recreate it through conquest. He knows things die, but you move on and helped build civilizations. Immortality means you have all the time in the world to study moe and collect rare items like limited edition capsule toys. If anything, she probably wishes she could still be immortal but with a body that was ten years older. Brought up by Kurt Godel. While everyone else is busy being all depressed about how someone immortal will outlive everyone they know, the idea simply thrills him instead. No need to worry about assassination, the ability to maintain an iron grip on the world for as long as you like However, he was in the minority opinion on that one. No Game No Life: Considering that it replenishes his Power of Existence every night, Yuuji wonders if the Reiji Maigo will make him live forever. If this is the case he considers it a good thing because it means he can stay with Shana forever. Free was imprisoned and restrained for a long time with the knowledge that not even death could free him. Does that bother him? The first time Soul impaled him, he bragged about it. The message essentially being: Immortality is great as long as you have a family of other immortals to spend it with, and you all really like each other. Lordgenome spends his endless life raising kids, spawning beasts, suppressing revolts and has fun doing all three. Viral is made immortal by Lordgenome and gloats about it to Simon. Touta Konoe from UQ Holder! He only slightly complains about not aging past twelve. Although, given the implication that he was created at his present age, he may not have aged past it in the first place. None of them ever seems to complain about life getting boring some of them are too busy trying not to get killed anyway other elves strike up bittersweet friendships with short-lived humans. The exceptions are the Glider elves who are bored and decadent. They are the oldest living elves, except for Timmain, who spent millenia in wolf form. As a wolf, she could not note the passage of time, giving her immunity to this effect. Morpheus makes a deal with Hob Gadling: After two hundred years, Hob tells Morpheus how he got rich, married, and had a son. Morpheus asks if Hob wants to die The Brief Lives storyline features Bernie Capax, a dull, unassuming lawyer who dreams of the mammoths he once walked among. It gave him power over fire and immortality. He becomes a superhero and is still able to enjoy his immortal life. The Archons in The Secret History may go through a lot of shit, but hey, they still more or less control world events and Reka gets to bed famous men throughout history. Vandal Savage occasionally has bouts of weariness concerning his existence , but for the most part he really gets a kick out of being an evil immortal bastard. Cameron Hodge is a dark version of this trope. He founded an anti-mutant organization targeting Warren Worthington, aka Angel, and his current team, X-Factor. As per the deal, Hodge survived Hodge returned later with a cyborg body during the X-Tinction Agenda, only to end up as a disembodied head buried under a mountain of rubble. He returned a third time as part of the techno-organic Phalanx, at which point the authors had forgotten about his immortality and supposedly killed him off, only for him to return again and finally get Killed Off for Real maybe during the Second Coming crossover. The Elders of the Universe relish immortality since it lets them pursue their personal obsessions forever. Then again, they are insane. This is the case with The Eternals and most gods especially Hercules. Since most of them live in a Society of Immortals and their closest friends and relatives are immortal too, they only have to feel bad about their mortal relationships. The League of Extraordinary Gentlemen Orlando has spent the past years screwing and fighting his way across the world multiple times. More Than Meets the Eye: Due to their incredibly long life spans, many Cybertronians believe that Cybertronians never die of natural causes, only trauma, and with a cure for the only thing that really challenged this- cybercrosis- now being found, this indeed seems to very much be the case. Religion claims this is because the Transformer god of death, Mortilus, was destroyed in ancient times. They definitely fit this trope as this is something that cybertronians do like to openly brag about and seem quite proud off. That was one thought Something new to see or do or learn or talk to. Well, everyone has disagreements now and then. Mars and I once spent fifteen years You know how good it feels to fall in love Add a thousand years. Undocumented Features , like Tenchi Muyo! The Pirates of the Caribbean fanfic Jack To The Future postulates that Captain Sparrow successfully located and used the Fountain of Youth, achieved Type II immortality, and spent the next few centuries participating in various historical events. This includes both positive and negative experiences, but overall he seems to be having a good time. Harry Potter and the Methods of Rationality have Harry himself take this stance and give a long list of the things he would do with his time to Dumbledore, in answer to his Who Wants to Live Forever? In A Hero , Daleks, who are perpetually at war with everything , consider a long life a mark of great skill. FIM fics about the opposite trope. Discussed in The Petriculture Cycle. Penumbra , an immortal, talks her into it by, among other things, refers to a saying common among alicorns: Even after traveling to the far reaches of the Omniverse and living for millennia they still enjoy it. Giovanni and Mickey have lived since the Cataclysm a thousand years ago. Neither of them have any complaints. Leo has been gifted with Resurrective Immortality and Darkrai has explicitly told him how to become fully immortal. So help us, Arceus In the Death Note fanfic Low Light , Light and L are for reasons yet unknown favored by the Shinigami King who makes it so that they cannot be killed at least by the Notebook. In the My Little Pony: Friendship Is Magic fanfic Luna The Match Maker , this is the conclusion most of the ponies and dragon granted it come to after some time to think on it. Marceline seems to lean more towards this trope than its opposite in the Adventure Time fanfic The Last Human , but doubts form when she realises she will outlive Finn. Those who do are free to join the military. In the fanfic Sailor Moon , which takes place centuries after the destruction of Crystal Tokyo and most of the Senshi dead. Only Rei, Setsuna and Artemis live, being effectively immortal. While Rei especially seems to have some problems with her immortality , Artemis is a lot more positive-minded about it, and shows the mindset of this trope when talking to the new Sailor Mercury, Sharma Dhiti: To do everything you want? To see everything, and go everywhere This opinion makes her Innocently Insensitive to the mortal ponies around her. In Lightning Round in Sailor Moon: Legends of Lightstorm, Lita has this reaction when Jason tells her that she will live forever unless something kills her. Tom initially feels that all wizards and witches should live forever. In Marionettes , it turns out that Trixie is an android. Suri Polomare, another android, is also quite excited by the prospect. Treasure of the Lost Lamp , Genie tells the nephews how his last master, the evil wizard Merlock, wished to live forever. On the one hand, he obviously misses his wife and daughter, and is sorely tempted when the option to finally die is presented to him. On the other hand, he seems to have decided to make the most out of his immortal existence, cheerfully indulging in modern technology like iPads and sports cars. His friend Dolen is worried this is a front , however. In The Man from Earth , the immortal John Oldman makes the best of eternity, gathering huge amounts of knowledge over the centuries. Even after thousands of years immortals are willing to kill each other to preserve their own immortality. That may be the system but they could always opt out by dying, retiring on holy ground , or killing all the other immortals. Some immortals - namely the good guys - are shown balancing the loneliness of immortality by enjoying life to the fullest and using their immortality to develop new pastimes and experience the world like no humans can.

In an official report sent to Rome, one of the persecutors, a prior named Abbe du Chayla, complained that no matter what he did, he could not succeed in harming the Camisards. When he ordered them shot, the musket balls would be found flattened between their clothing and their skin. When he closed their hands upon burning coals, they were not harmed, and when he wrapped them head to toe in cotton soaked with oil and set them on fire, they did not burn. And death is not from nature; rather it is against nature. He left books for his Rosicrucian brothers and they guarded his body. There are too many historical incidences stories and knowledge handed down regarding Immortality to list it all here. Nearly every major civilisation throughout history contain examples of Immortal men. I hope this post wets your appetite in exploring this subject. Nevertheless, Arphaxad, who was born years after the Flood, lived for years and his son Salem for Anacreon assures us that Arganthemius, king of the Tartessos was years; Cinirus, king of Cyprus, lived to years; and Aeginius, to years. Petrus Maffeus, in his Indian history, testified that in Bengal an ordinary man was found, who had neither science nor erudition, who was years old, and as proof thereof he related everything from memory that had happened in his lifetime, and which was quite in accord with the chronicles. The great Seneca, a Spaniard by birth, reached 44 years of age and would without doubt have become much older if his cruel and unjust disciple Nero had not cut the thread of his life. Emperor Claudius, after sufficiently examining the age of the Bolognese Titus Fullonius, finally found that he had been years old. The Hun King Attila died in the th year of his life. Petrus de Natalibus asserts that St Severinus, Bishop of Tongres, reached years of age and was ordained Bishop in his th year. Nicolaus de Comitibus certifies that among the Bracmanniers there had been one of years. It is also easy for Nature to give to one man alone so many years as she might otherwise give to many together, just as she bestows on a giant so much strength and matter as would at other times be required for the formation of many human bodies. Such a one was a man of the lineage of Turgan, not far from Lake Constance, who fought against the Saxons under Charlemagne. He impaled eight of them on his pike, carried them over his shoulder and walked through the Rhine with them to his comrades, saying: Look here the German frogs that I have caught; I cannot understand their croaking. Guido Bonatus assures us that he knew someone by the name of Richard, who was already years old and could undeniably prove that he had seen service under Charlemagne. In addition, there is also much talk about a certain Jean du Temps who served in the war under Charlemagne and died under Louis VII in the year From this we may conclude that he must have lived close to years, as Charlemagne had already been crowned Emperor in the year He was born in and had already years when he was put before King Charles I in England on 9 October He had seen nine Kings on the English throne: The good man praised God among other things also for the fact that he had always steadfastly adhered to the Roman Catholic religion, although he had seen three changes in religion during his lifetime, under Henry VIII, Queen Mary Tudor, and then again under Elizabeth. He readily confessed that he had been put on trial in his th year because he had got a young girl with child. This was also the reason why, after the customs of the country, he had to stand in front of the church door, covered with a white cloth and holding a wax candle in his hand, thus obviously doing penance. Sixteen years before his death he lost his sight. He died in London on 24 November , within half an hour, without having been sick before or noticing the approaching death. After his death, his body was opened and all his inner parts were found to be healthy, except his lung which was full of hardened blood. The physicians attributed this to a change of air, as he had been brought to his place of death from a locality where the air had been much purer and milder than in London. It is rightly said that the dead are the best teachers because they teach us in their works without flattery and self-interest, as the following epitaph informs us in regard to longevity: Continnence and Frugality Prolong Our Lifespan, The great Pythagorean Appolonius of Tyana retained his youth for over years by his continence and frugality, which also caused the ancient anchorites to extend their lifespan and health so far. Due precisely to continence and frugality, the great philosopher Democritus also enjoyed the best health for years. And it is worth remembering what Diogenes Laertius thinks of his death: His sister having indicated that she could not attend the festivities of the goddess Ceres if he died before them, he complied and sustained himself during his last three days of life with the smell of warm bread. The true celibate and chaste state is indeed an excellent means for living long and healthy. But Artaxerxes, King of Persia, who begot children, ended his life only after years, due solely to the conspiracy of fifty of his children. The Roman Emperor Proclus once boasted that a hundred Polish girls had given birth to of his children within two weeks. In such a way, at the time of St Jerome, a Roman man could have had a legion of legitimate children with a Roman lady, according to an account of this Church Father who lived at the time of Pope Damasus. In Rome there lived a man who had already become a widower twenty times. He had married a widow who, in turn, had already 20 husbands. When she died, he attended the corpse with a laurel wreath on his head and a palm branch in his hand, under the great cheers of other men, which they uttered because he had survived his otherwise incomparable wife. Moderation and physical exercise also make us healthy and strong. This is why the Romans were extremely amazed at the strength and giant size of our Gauls, who did not drink wine and for a long time knew nothing about it, until the Swiss Helicon first brought the vine and its juice to Gaul. Likewise, the kind of food we eat contributes a great deal to a long life. People in the Province of Limoges mostly eat nothing but chestnuts and live for a very long time, because they get from them nourishment that is little subject to corruption and thus does not easily dissipate. A good constitution and the right temperature of the radical moisture and the natural warmth are necessary for a long life. The superfluous moisture tones the warmth down; and frequent warmth in turn tones down the moisture. That is why a long life can be expected of a sanguine constitution, as the blood is then warm and moist. The aggressive and ever active fire of the choleric constitution cannot last long in a dry person. The great moisture of the phlegmatic cannot sufficiently cook the natural warmth; and the melancholic is all too dry and cold. This also happens with the sanguine and melancholic, when the warmth and moisture of the blood is tempered by the dryness of the melancholic and can likewise give a long life. In addition, a healthy place of residence contributes not a little to a long life. When Emperor Vespasian and his son Titus had a census made of all of Italy, four men were found in a town of Vellajacum, region of Piacenza, who were each years old, and still six other men each years. At the same time, there lived in Arimini a woman by name of Tertulla who was years old. Likewise another in Faventia in her nd year. Pliny relates from the Isigon that in India the Cirneses generally live to years. Pomponius Mela reports that the residents of a town situated at the foot of Mount Atlas live twice as long as other inhabitants of the globe. And Orisicrates asserts that there are Indians in the tropics who are as tall as five elbows and live to without debilitating old age. Ctesias likewise avers that those who lived in Pandoria in the valleys generally reached years, and they had this odd characteristic that they had white and grey hair in their youth but black hair in old age. Helanicus writes that in the region of Etolia the inhabitants usually became years old. Among them, Pictoreus reached years, according to a report by Damasus. If Ephorus is to be believed, the Arcadian King lived for years. And Alexander Cornelius says that in Illyria a certain Dandon extended his life to years. But in his Periplus Xenophon goes even further, saying that the Maritime King lived for years and his son for Olaus Magnus writes in the 4th book of his Histories that the people of the coldest midnight countries usually live to years of age; and in his 12th book he says that the inhabitants of Iceland reach more than years. In his Historia Naturali, Nierembergicus asserts that the people living in the Jucantic mountains became quite old. And in the region of Versin in Brazil, as is testified to by Antonius Pipafelta, people very often reach years. According to a report by Ludovic Bartama the age of years is quite common in blessed Arabia. In the Auvergne it often happens that fathers see the children of their grandchildren, and I have read somewhere that in our Alps a single man was the head and progenitor of a whole village which had more than a hundred households, all stemmed from him. It so happened that our host and hostess, both healthy and full of vigor, had each in fact lived for years. In the previous discourse I have sufficiently shown by examples from the ecclesiastical and temporal history that there have at all times of the world been persons who lived for several hundred years. From this is it very easy to conclude that it is not impossible for us to live just as long as they did, and that the story of Friedericus Gualdus, who was years old, is no fiction. About this, I will now also bring here a literal extract from the Dutch newspaper of April 3, Extract from a Letter from Venice of March 7, He carried with him his portrait which had been made by Titian, already dead for years! From this we may conclude that this man has had the true Universal Medicine, whereby he was able to keep himself healthy for such a long time. This is no fiction, however, but there are here many credible witnesses who spoke with this man himself, and who left here for no other reason that that it was said of him that he possessed the true secret of the Universal Medicine. The lovers of great curiosities will investigate this matter and inform us of the result, so that we can thereby also be useful to the public.

According to Law of Attraction, you become what you think about most. Watch the movie The Secret and then keep reading! As I told you above, here are the secrets of manifestation "revealed! Your belief is a supra-law that can change your reality. But belief is not enough to become immortal. Your inner beliefs can be conscious or unconscious. In other words, the idea of that image will grow when you are afraid of it. Why does this happen? Because fear is an emotion, and emotions amplify the manifestation process of thoughts or mental images. Believing implies uncertainty, duality. When you have doubts about something you can also attract what you do not want to happen consequently. Knowing is different from believing. When you know something you do not have to force yourself to believe it. There is no such thing as good or bad. Things are just different. They have different frequencies and different vibration. Only your mind gives value to the reality that surrounds you. For more information about how we perceive the world watch the video from Quantum Physics. What if you reach the point where you KNOW that you are immortal? It is like you saying that the air does not exist "because you cannot see it. And in the same vein for a believer, God would not exist, because nobody has seen God! But that does not mean these phenomena do not exist. We treat the physical problem from a physical perspective. Usually you will not find the solution to a problem when you are in the middle of it. That is to say, you have to step away from the problem in order to see the solution. Science studies the aging process only from a physical perspective. Some doctors do the same with healing. Usually doctors do not analyze illness from a broader perspective. This leads to prescribing pills to treat a physical condition. It is like being inside the problem and trying to resolve it. The same goes for the aging process. If we believe in aging, this leads us to age. If we see people around us aging, then we subconsciously form the belief a supra-law that we will also age. If we see people around us dying, we form the belief that we will also die, which is a self-fulfilling prophecy; we will die. Our beliefs create our reality. In primary school, when you were a child, you were taught that 1 minus 2 is not possible. Later you found out that 1 minus 2 equals -1. Later you learned about equations, integrals and other wonders! You may believe that 1 plus 1 equals 2. Let me tell you something: How can this be when 1 apple is different from another? I will end up with 3 famous quotes about the fact that you are the creator of your reality: The mind is everything. What we think, we become. Your belief creates your reality! If you want to enjoy learning about areas like:

6: The Importance of Keeping Secrets | PairedLife

This was supposed to be 'No Immortal can keep a secret!' No Magnus explaining his daddy issues to Freud then >.< Cassie this better be really good to make up for taking the originally planned story away.

Contact Author Can you keep a secret? As strange as it may sound, keeping a secret is one hell of a difficult job to do. Secrets are of many types. To keep a secret can be so hard and difficult for so many people to the extent that the only way out for them to relieve themselves off such a great burden will be just to spill the beans not minding whose ox is eventually gored in the process. I perfectly understand these people. Sometimes the compulsion or urge to say something or just voice it out could be so strong that they will no other option other than to say it all. Sometimes gossip is fun and interesting and people really love to gossip, I know. Some other people are of the habit of NOT keeping any secret at all and they see it as fun when they reveal everything that they were not told to say. Such people are easy to spot. To these people, they derive their pleasure by doing it. Have you heard this statement before: This statement implies that keeping a secret is almost impossible for most people to do. Why is keeping secret so hard? In my opinion, it is simply because the person who is spilling the beans by revealing all those hidden details must have missed the importance of being able to keep secret. So as a reminder, I am going to base our discussion today on the different reasons why I believe it is still a very nice virtue for one to be able to keep a secret. Trust and Confidence Of course, keeping secrets helps in building massive trust and confidence in our daily relationship with other people. People who are not able to do this are often considered as very unstable, highly disloyal and above all very untrustworthy! Trust is one of the most important requirements for building all forms of relationships be it in business, romantic or personal. Nothing could hit me where it really hurts the most than the betrayal of trust. In truth, personally I rate and value trust much more than love. I believe it is the same for you too, right? If you can keep my secrets, that means I have nothing to fear again because I can now have my loyal friend who can be counted upon to keep mum when required to do so. When you are able to accomplish this very one thing for others, their confidence in you will surely increase and trust people. You may not know it but, words will spread that you are very dependable! Soon, more and more people will be drawn to you. What other better way to easily make friends? Can I tell you a secret? Staying Out of Trouble In our world today where staying out of any form of trouble is very much advisable, one sure way of effectively doing that is by keeping secrets. Most rumors stem from secrets. Do you love to spread rumors? Please always remember that when you voluntarily join in the spreading that juicy rumor you might not know it but you could be landing yourself in serious trouble because you will not be able to authenticate the veracity of the story. Remember, some people have gone to prison because of what they said. One other thing you must remember, especially if you are already in the shameful habit of saying what you were asked not to say, is to remember that you could be under a test. One easy way that can be used to differentiate true friends from poseurs and charlatans is by telling a very harmless secret to that very person and then watching out to see if the story still comes out or gets back to you. You may not know it when you are doing it but you might have just failed in very important test, shut down all future doors to great wealth, connections, joy and happiness if you fail to keep the secret! something that my come back and haunt for the rest of your life! Self Control Keeping secrets can be a very effective way of practicing self control. From the place where I come from in Africa, that is one way of being a Man. A man is not expected to gossip or reply to questions that are not asked of him. Well, at times the temptation could just be too strong, you just have it at the tip of your tongue and now you just open your mouth and what next! OK, you know what! just forget it! When you get into the habit of holding back whatever you really want to say which in this case happens to be a secret, I tell you, you are getting better in self control. It also shows that you now have the ability to think carefully, look carefully before you leap! In certain cases, when you are able to practice self control, it also means you will also be able to consider all dimensions and consider all possibilities as well as the veracity of that very tale you are about to tell. Your ability to hold back without running your mouth unnecessarily may also give you the opportunity to be able to see the ludicrousness in what you wanted to say as well as give you the opportunity to consider the importance or usefulness of that very thing you wanted to say to them. Simply put, you are now a Man â€” a thinking MAN! Power to Play God Imagine if you have the power to keep the whole secrets of everybody on this planet? This is what I call the power to play God. Keeping secrets can be fun too. Trust me on this one. If you think I am lying, just ask any Catholic priest. Oh, that would be gossiping, rightâ€”!

They build up a character's experience, inventory, what have you and then the game stops being supported and they lose everything. Well, that may be a thing of the past from now on. Rather than be attached to a game, they are attached to the Ethereum blockchain. Like when an online game shuts down. With IPCs, you simply move your character into another game. Because of this, levels, abilities, and items gained will stay with the character no matter where they go. From there, the rest is up to you. See details below Each IPC is unique and random. If you generate a new IPC, all of its attributes will be unknown until the IPC is formed, so you get to work with a surprise each time. Game developers simply need to interface with the blockchain to incorporate an IPC into their game. Also, later this year we will offer a mirror service that will help cache IPC dynamic values such as inventory, history, backstory all created by the owner and the gameplay experience of that particular IPC. There is a range of characters already in the works. Immortal Player Characters can live in pretty much any game, when the developer allows it. But IPCs are also going to get a game of their own. Annunziata and the Playchemy team are in the process of designing IPCs and these will go on sale soon. One of those games is IPC City. IPC City is a 2D world, done up in the 8-bit style. IPCs get downloaded into the city simply by entering their ID number in. Your character will receive a list of quests it needs to complete. Each quest will center around a different challenge and will have a set time limit. Players get rewarded when they finish a quest in time. The longer the quest, the larger the reward. Completing quests will give IPCs both experience and memories. There are several different ways for you to get an IPC. Generating a character will be totally random, from how tall they are to their gender and everything in between. This method is also done through the IPC smart contract. IPCs are bought with ETH in this manner, with the seller setting the sale price which must be greater than zero. Immortal Player Characters may very well be the future of blockchain gaming. Immortal, transferable, and badass. What more could you want? Are you ready to play? The giveaway will start on Tuesday, July 24th. The first round will be to give away three of the IPCs, so the first three people to enter the giveaway, as per the instructions, will win their very own, unique Immortal Player Character!

The film addresses an immortal man's experience keeping his immortality a secret throughout the ages, what he has witnessed, why he has no mementos of his vast life and the reactions of a diverse group of academics when he reveals himself to them.

It seemed that the higher level it was, the higher the heavenly court immortal who passed it one was, the simpler the name. What Yang Chen was thinking about right now was whether the Universe Raising Treasure Secret would be effective on drawing talismans. When all was said and done, these were true invaluable treasures. Yang Chen read over the Universe Raising Treasure Secret very lightly, then started to ponder its mysteries, spending two days time before raising his head with a smile. The remainder required practical experimentation to figure out. This bit of introductory content was actually the key to cultivating it, the operation method. At that time the Elderly Lord had given him the mnemonic chant, but in order to understand what materials suited what techniques, there was no way other than for Yang Chen to constantly experiment and ponder. His hand issued a line of red light that softly covered that fireball talisman. The fireball talisman only shone slightly, then recovered to normal shortly thereafter, seemingly not the slightest bit different from a normal fireball talisman. But holding it in his hand, Yang Chen could feel that the fireball talisman had undergone some minute change. Phew, the seemingly improved fireball talisman suddenly ignited, shooting out an enormous fireball that blasted a nearby rock into pieces. With his experience, Yang Chen could see with just a glance that the power of the talisman that had passed the Universe Raising Treasure Secret was at least twenty percent higher. This was still when Yang Chen was just at the first level of cultivation, it would increase even more as his cultivation advanced. Of course, that was only talismans. As an experienced person, Yang Chen knew better than anyone what the significance of such lowest level talismans was. Thinking of this he also very soon stopped being amazed. With this successful experiment, Yang Chen disregarded everything else to first use the Universe Raising Treasure Secret on all the talismans he had on hand. After a short time, when no more large improvements could be made, he set off in one direction, rushing towards the five hundred kilometer distant Sun Painting Mountain. Therefore there were no cultivators here. This also led to this being a haven for wild animals, and one could frequently see some vicious beasts. At the same time, this was also one of the reasons Yang Chen had to prepare so many talismans. With the foundation of the first level of qi refining, there was basically no need for Yang Chen to fear these animals, at the same time it also made him even more agile and lithe, enough to deal with the complex terrain here. Yang Chen knew this bit very well. Yang Chen found an open space within a dense thicket and sat down to meditate a while. After recovering his spiritual force and physical strength, he began to look all around, searching for the location of the medicine garden. Unable to rise into the sky to observe, he could only climb vantage points, Yang Chen expended a lot of effort to roughly ascertain the direction through the paths of mountain rivers. The reason that sect could find the medicine garden in his last life, was because a severely injured great scholar at the peak of jindan had carelessly escaped here, stumbling onto the location. It was basically impossible for ordinary people to care about this place. After resting once again and recovering his physical strength and spiritual power, Yang Chen stood and suddenly turned his head to speak in one direction: Additionally, Yang Chen was still a bit afraid that there was divine consciousness attached to the pill Shi Shanshan had given him. Naturally, this fellow had followed him the whole way to the Sun Painting mountain. Almost from the moment they entered the Sun Painting Mountain, Yang Chen had discovered that the divine consciousness Shi Shanshan had wrapped up in the pill had already disappeared, presumably the distance already exceeded the range Shi Shanshan could sense. This body refining pill was useless to people who had already started to cultivate, and could only improve the spiritual roots of ordinary people a little bit, but had a good chance of inciting the spiritual roots of ordinary people to appear. It might be that fairy Shi gave Yang Chen this pill back then out of gratitude, in order to give him the chance of cultivating. Thus, someone started to covet what Yang Chen had, but Yang Chen disappeared very quickly, so a lot of people started to search within a radius of hundreds of kilometers. Appearing here was the one winner who stumbled on Yang Chen and sensed the divine consciousness within the pill. He already had complete postnatal spiritual roots, so this body refining pill was basically rubbish to him. Besides, as long as he wanted, he could have countless such things after obtaining the medicine garden. Seeing that this pill was an elixir that required at least foundation building to refine, the youth felt a burst of satisfaction. Even though it was meaningless to him, he could still use it to trade for some other things or perhaps some favors. Immortals had the vision of immortals. However, things turn out contrary to what is desired. Yang Chen wanted this youth to leave after getting the pill, so he could collect the medicine garden as he wished. I think, it might be something shameful? A lot of people knew that fairy Shi had given this pill to Yang Chen, so if Yang Chen made some noise later and implicated him, then it would be an enormously bad turn. Only the dead can keep a secret forever. Immediately feeling a chill at his neck, he sank into darkness. Despite already having cultivation at the third level of qi gathering, when facing Yang Chen he was still treated like an ordinary mortal. Without any idea how Yang Chen discovered him, without using any means to protect himself, he had been directly beheaded by one competent blade from Yang Chen. Dying early or dying late are no different, be on your way at ease! In fact, even for the lowest level mountain god, the time required to ascend to the spiritual world and then again to the immortal world, a thousand years was nothing. Swiftly walking over in the direction he had been investigating, his divine consciousness spread out. Soon about to collide with the tree, Yang Chen still moved forward without pause. Just as one foot touched the tree, the scenery before his eyes suddenly changed. A vast dome suddenly appeared above Yang Chen, as if he stood in a great palace hall.

To keep a secret can be so hard and difficult for so many people to the extent that the only way out for them to relieve themselves off such a great burden will be just to spill the beans not minding whose ox is eventually gored in the process.

Then they managed to look at one another. There was a grunt, a second grunt, and then they pulled themselves up from the sofa with tremendous difficulty. It was the general address of all New York vampires. Magnus looked at them more closely. He had never quite seen vampires like these. They appeared to be "sick"? And these vampires had eaten. The evidence was all over their faces. Also, they were twitching a bit. They shuffled out onto the landing and then down the stairs. Magnus shut the door firmly and, with a swoop of his hand, moved a marble-topped dry sink to block the door from the inside. At least that had been too heavy and sturdy to break or remove, but it was full of old dirty clothes that seemed to be covering up something he instinctively knew he never wanted to see. The smell was terrible. That had to go first. One crack of blue hit the air, and the funk was replaced with the light smell of night-blooming jasmine. He took the record off the record player. The vampires had left behind a pile of albums. He had a look through this and picked out the new Fleetwood Mac album that everyone was playing. There was a light magical sound to the music. Magnus swept his hand through the air again, and slowly the apartment began to right itself. As a thank-you, he sent the garbage and the various disgusting little piles over to the Dumont. He had promised to send them their things, after all. Despite the magic he used on his window air-conditioning unit, despite the cleaning, despite everything he had done—the apartment still felt sticky and dirty and unpleasant. He gave up at around six in the morning and went out in search of coffee and breakfast. He was still on London time anyway. Out on the street some people were clearly just coming home for the night. There was a woman hopping along in one high heel and one bare foot. There were three people covered in glitter and sweat, all wearing flopping feather boas, emerging from a cab by his corner. Magnus settled down in the corner booth of a diner across the street. It was the only thing open. It was surprisingly full. Again, most of the people seemed to be at the end of their day, not the start, and were gobbling pancakes to soak up the alcohol in their stomachs. Magnus had purchased a paper by the cash register. The city was broke. Half the buildings in the Bronx had burned down. Trash piled up on the streets because there was no money for collection. Where you been, man? He wore jeans, a leather vest with no shirt, and a gold cross on a chain around his neck. Magnus smiled and folded his paper away. Werewolf love was intense. I mean, messed up. They were disgusting, for a start. And they looked sick. They love that stuff. But then they just started attacking people all the time. In the clubs, on the streets. And the vampires are so in violation that anything can happen. Greg stubbed out his barely smoked cigarette. Wanted to say hi. I want to see this for myself. This amplified the pong of the overflowing trash—spilling out of metal trash cans which only cooked it and intensified the scent, bags of it piled up on the curbs. Trash just thrown down onto the street itself. Magnus stepped over the hamburger wrappers and cans and newspapers. We go street by street. There are a lot of clubs over by the river, in the Meatpacking District. I guess it could be the heat making them freak out. It gets to everyone. There were certainly worse things than taking a walk with a handsome, shirtless man on a summer morning. Now that it was more of a civilized hour, people were out. Gay couples walking hand in hand, in the open, during the day. That was fairly new. Even as the city seemed to be falling apart, something good was happening. Max Lincoln was the head of the werewolves. Everyone just called him by his last name, which fit with his tall and gaunt frame and bearded face—and because, like the more famous Lincoln, he was a famously calm and resolute leader. Camille had always been a bit aloof, at least to strangers and acquaintances. She had the air of royalty. The private Camille was a different beast entirely. I heard that from one of the fey. They claim to have overheard it from some vamps walking through Central Park. He must have known about what was happening and had some words with Camille. Many of these were now clubs. There was a desolate feel here in the morning—just the remains of the abandoned parties and the river slugging along below. Even the river seemed to resent the heat. They checked everywhere—in the alleys, next to the trash. They looked under vans and trucks. Time to check in.

This required a quick walk in the ever-increasing heat. One werewolf stood behind the counter, under the menu and the stock photos of various Chinese dishes. She looked Magnus over. When Greg nodded, she let them pass through a beaded curtain to the back. There was no kitchen behind the back wall. Instead there was a door that led to a much larger facility—the old Second Precinct police station. The cells came in handy during the full moon. Magnus followed Greg down the dimly lit hallway to the main room of the station, which was already full. The pack had gathered, and Lincoln stood at the head of the room, listening to a report and nodding gravely. When he saw Magnus, he raised a hand in greeting.
