Olcott , and the State Treasurer Thomas B. Under this Legislation, funding from the state would be distributed to the counties for Highway Construction. By the time the initial Commission was formed, Multnomah County had already started work on one of the first engineering feats of the newly formed Commission, the Columbia River Highway. Bowley, was assigned the task of developing the initial highway plan for the State of Oregon, to be delivered to the Oregon Highway Commission by June 3rd, He made his recommendation on precise due date on June 3rd, He recommended the construction of a system of eight State Highways: The proposed Columbia Highway from the Bowley Plan. This became the Old Oregon Trail Highway 6. This became the Oregon Coast Highway 9. This is still the Pacific Highway 1, although with the construction of Interstate 5, many of the original segments were transferred to other State Highways or to local jurisdictions. With only a few differences, the route is pretty much the same route as the current The Dalles-California Highway 4. This was never constructed as a contiguous highway, but most of this route is the basis for the Sherman Highway 42, the Crooked River Highway 14, and the Fremont Highway The East-West Highway consisting of two segments.: Click on the map to see a larger PDF version of the map. In addition, the existing Highway plan was not comprehensive enough, with few cross mountain routes, and many communities and county seats not served. The new Commission came into existence on March 1st, With the new Legislation, the Commission would no longer consisted of the Governor, Secretary of State and State Treasurer serving as "part time" Commissioners. Instead, the Governor would appoint and the Legislature would approve a three person commission with rotating terms. All decisions of the commission required unanimous votes. Also, the Legislation expanded the Highway plan from 8 Highways to 36 Highways. These Highways would later become the Primary Trunk Highways system, most of which is in use today. The Highways were identified by a name and a one or two digit number and would be marked with a Diamond Shaped Marker as seen in the image to the left.
