The extent to which the law achieves justice Law and society The role law plays in society The law as a social control mechanism The way in which the law creates and deals with consensus and conflict The realist approach to law making Law and technology The intersection of law and technology Key issues, including privacy and data protection and cyber-crime Cross-border issues and future challenges Thinking Conceptually Overview General approaches: The nature of law explains some of the key features of our legal system such as the courts system and the evolution of law from different legal sources. It also shows how our laws relate to moral and philosophical theories and how this relationship is changing over time. The knowledge from this section is central to understanding the wider issues within the law. These legal structures and theories can then be used to understand some of the other areas of the specification. Common misconceptions or difficulties learners may have: The nature of law does not have a fixed range of cases or statutes to be learned like the other substantive areas such as criminal, tort, and contract. It is more about developing an understanding of the thinking behind the cases and why certain judges make rulings which other judges would not always agree with. The underpinning theories here are also not static. As society, morality and technology change the law tries to respond to these changes. Conceptual links to other areas of the specification – useful ways to approach this topic to set learners up for topics later in the course: The nature of law is a synoptic area whereby examples from other parts of the specification can be used to support arguments and discussions. It also looks at evolving legal areas such as the use of artificial intelligence and robotics and explores how the law should respond to the challenges this creates. Thinking Contextually More than other areas of the specification it is possible to promote synoptic thinking through this topic. This area also lends itself to researching new and emerging issues within the law such as cybercrime. Internet research of current and emerging issues. Mind mapping the trends and issues within the subject, e. Comparing and contrasting emerging cases and issues with existing judgments. Debating the role of judges and Parliament in specific reference to approaches to law making. Group work to examine, discuss and present detail on how the rules and theories apply in practice. Wider reading for comprehension and evaluation around the main themes. Evaluative essays and other writing. Civil and Criminal law This activity invites the learner to consider the differences between civil and criminal law. It also demonstrates that any given situation may give rise to more than one type of action. Learners discuss the appropriate area of law relating to two scenarios.
